the restore the Republic, but how long it would lage and upon the sweet wills of one of the most fickle peoples in the world. But we must take into account the attitude of the United States towards Mexico. It is, of course, well enough known that our neighborr regard the conquest of Mexico by French troops as an unwarrantable interference of a European government in American aflairs, and Maximilian as an interloper and usurper. The government at Washington still recognizes the republic as the lightlined states towards and such as the papers, it is but a few days since an ambassador of some sort from the Emperor of Maximilian, appeared in Washington seeking for his pains. The whole tone of the press and of public opinion indicates an itching on the part of our neighbors to see Maximilian out of Mexico.
