Circuit Court.

The case of McKenney vs. Bradley was continued yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Stanley, who was on the stand when the court adjourned, was subjected to a rigid cross-examination by Mr. Thomson. She stuck to her assertion that she had been in receipt of rents from the property in question for twenty-six years, but said she had been married the second time, in inteten years, and her first husband had been dead two or three years.

Mr. Thomson then, in answer to this evidence, called James Smith, who proved that the property in question had been deeded to him by Mrs. Stanley's husband, and that since that time he had had tenants on the place. He also proved that Bradley, the defendant, owned the place through him. The deeds made out in 1848 and '51 were produced.
