TALK ON BETTER TERMS

SUMMARY OF LIBERAL LEADER'S VANCOUVER SPEECH.

ATTITUDE OF LIBERAL PARTY IS CLEARLY DEFINED.

Last week J. A. Macdonald, M. P. P., eader of the opposition, addressed two leader of the opposition, addressed two important public meeting in the cities best of it on either side, as Mr. McBride of Vancouver and New Westminster. These meetings were briefly covered at the time in special despatches, but in the time in special despatches, but in the prominence being given to the argument and have nothing to the argument and have nothing to the prominence being given to the argument and have nothing to the prominence being given to the argument and have nothing to the prominence being given to the argument and have nothing to the prominence being given by the prominence of the argument and have nothing to the prominence of the argument and have nothing to the prominence of the argument and have nothing to the prominence of the argument and have nothing to the argument are also are a the time in special despatches, but in view of the prominence being given to the "Better Terms" question, which our esteemed fellow citizen, W. A. Macdonald, K. C., says is to be the chief plank in the McBride-Socialist government's campaign platform, it may be timely to give a more extended summary of liberal leader Macdonald's remarks on this question at Vancouver. Mr. J. A. Macdonald discussed the question at great it is well known that Mr. McBride wishes to make this a party question and wishes to making it an issue in the coming fear for making it an issue in the coming to the position of the people must be paramount and they must be or one mind and must place the interests of this province before that of a party or any action will be out of the question. donaid discussed the question at great length, going into the entire history of British Columbta's relations with the dominion government and analyzing the provincial case from many points of view. The following excerpts from his speech indicate clearly enough his general position and will serve to clear away some of the erroneous impressions that recent statements on this subject by an ill-informed section of the McBride-Socialist government press, more concerned to raise an issue that will divert attention from matters of very great interest to taxpayers than to promote a proper understanding of the case, may possibly have occasioned:

One of the proposals made at Ottawa was that the subject should be submitted to arbitration, and some people case, may possibly have occasioned:

One of the proposals made at Ottawa was that the subject should be submitwas that the subject should be submitted to arbitration, and some people thought that scheme was all right. The answer was obvious, and was made by premier Whitney when he said that arbitrators were for settling disputes, not for the purpose of negotiations. There had been nothing to arbitrate, but there was something to negotiate, and premier McBride thing to negotiate, and premier McBride should have made use of the material which it had taken three years to gathwhich it had taken three years to gainer together. If an arbitration board was appointed, all it could do would be to come to British Columbia and ascerciate cost of education, the geochemic of the cost of education, the geochemic of the confederation. There was no reason why It was a question of statistics, and premier McBride and his government were the ones who knew it. If it was a question of finding out the customs duties then it must be a quesion of statistics.

The methods described by the common should not give over this land, and if they did sell it at five or even two and a half dollars an acre, it would be an asset that would pay off the entire provincial debt and place British Columbia in a position which would be much The matters discussed at Ottawa were not such matters as the taking of evidence, but of compiling of statistics in dence, but of compiling of statistics in support of what the people of British Columbia were asking from the dominion government. That was a phase which he did not believe was presented at the conference, and which was one of the strongest arguments which the of the strongest arguments which the people could advance for the reason why they should get those additional

There had been no controversy then Then came the question of what specia recognition was coming to British Co-lumbia. It was admitted that something additional was due, and if the proper facts had been pressed it would have ben easily seen that the extra $100,000 a year would not meet the needs of the province. If it had been pointed out that by reason of the change of the fiscal policy of the government of 1871 the people were paying twice as much as they had been then any reasonable men would have seen that British Columbia was entitled to a great deal more than $100,000 a thing additional was due, and if the pro to a great deal more than $100,000

At the time when the Alaska boundary was fixed in 1893 at Paris, the con servative government was very parti-cular to get the case for Canada prepared by the ablest lawyers and the same when the boundary dispute arose a few years ago. Instead of doing that or taking his own attorney-general or Mr. Cowan, who had made a special study of the subject, the premier went to Ottawa alone and attempted to show to Ottawa alone and attempted to show by glittering generalities that Britisl Columbia was entitled to a special amount. Without having the case properly prepared, even if Mr. McBride was a man of the most splendid ability he could not make the impression he should on a body of such men as sa at the conference.

It had been claimed that all the other eight members had been against Mr. McBride, but was it not reasonable, asked Mr. Macdonald, that premier Mc parliament to give him what he was entitled to? He did not go to the dominion government and never got past the conference. As a matter of fact he TAKE NOTICE that an application has ence and went to Victoria and said the dominion government must be condemned because the people of

Mr. McBride quit the confere before it got to the question of the rights of British Columbia. If Mr. Mc-Bride had gone to the dominion gov-ernment he would have got some rea-sonable assurance that the dominion government would not turn him down, but would have offered to join him as Mr. Fielding had done, and he would have got better terms. He had refused to return to the conference with Mr. Fielding and the result was that unless the people of this province accepted $100,000 a year for ten years they would have to commence all over again, and how could that be done? The proposition of taking the matter to the imperial government, continued Mr. Macdonald, was absurd. The act of union was an imperial act and had been passed by an imperial parliament and what would the imperial parliament say if such a question was taken before it? It would simply say that the act was one agreeing to union and as there had been no breach of the terms of the act, British Columbia would have to get one of the other provinces to go and say "We was a make them give us more received," and it would no.

Mr. Macdonald's remarks were greeted with profonged applause.

In reply to the vote of thanks and confidence Mr. Macdonald stated that with regard to his going to Ottawa, he had neither directly or indirectly made the suggestion. He had need it mentioned in the conservative had been influe mg that Mr. Months and months had counsel and the attorney general
