THE DYING GIRL. 'Tis growing dark, my mother,
So very dark to night;
Oh, tell me now the reason,
I cannot see the light?
Am I growing blind mother, And never more must see?

If not—Oh! then, my mother,
What can the reason be? Speak louder, sweet mother dear.

And tell me now I pray, If I no more shall hear The gentle words you say oh! tell me quickly, mother, If I no more may greet That voice of thine; dear mother, So kind and ever sweet.

Oh! why am I growing cold? I am so chilly now The perspiration, mother,
Is gathering on my brow,
Fold me to thy breast, mother, And warm my trobbing heart, For something's whispering me. That you and I must part.

Oh! tell me quickly, mother, For I am losing breath, And clasp me closer, mother Now tell me, is this death? Oh! do not weep, sweet mother, For see I am not blind, A bright and glorious light Is breaking on my mind.

The light is dazzling, mother, The music loud and clear; I am now no longer cold, And I can see and hear Oh! Look again, my mother, And see that angel band; And see !- oh, see sweet mo They're beckoning with their has

See! they are showing, mother, A little robe so white; And a tiny little crown And golden harp so bright. But oh! my darling mother, They're coming now for me, And they'll clasp me in their arms, And bear me far from thee.

But 'twill not be long, mother, Ere they again will come, And take thee too, my mother, Up to my happy home. They've robed me in white, mother, To bear me to the sky, Oh! meet me there, sweet mother-Now - one fond kiss -good bye!
