

The Sun lazily rose in the Eastern sky and illuminated the glistening dew drops hanging from my new toy: A C5-A Galaxy. The snow was quickly melting, and the uncovered patches of green released the sweet fragrance of previously frozen animal feces.

Ah! Spring is in the air, and I'm California-bound for a date with Destiny.

10:45 a.m. - Fredericton airport staff informs us that the loading operation is complete. We begin to warm up the engines and prepare for takeoff.

11:00 a.m. - Takeoff. I unfasten my seatbelt and get changed into my new guise. I am now U.S. Colonel Stephen Marks, and I must remember to thank good ol' George for all the necessary papers.

11:15 a.m. - The bar on the plane opens.

1:30 p.m. - We land. The pilot throws cold water on my face to bring me around.

I stumble out of the plane into the Nevada sunshine. Luckily, I have my government issue specially designed aviator sunglasses. However, I am seriously dehydrated and I down a few cold diet pepsi. Luckily we have a few thousand extra cases of the stuff lying around.

Dear Diary,
Brunsdate 123.23. Well everything is finally ready. The B2 is sitting in our secret hide-out, and after we unloaded the Galaxy cargo, I got to ditch it in the ocean. Now we just have to wait.

Memo: from The President of the United States to Stephen Marks

The B2 is at the required location. (Ssssh!). Please be very careful. Also, I think it would not go over too well if you toss empty beer cans out of the bomb bay like you did last time. And, leave it clean. I don't like having to scrape that noxious substance off the wall.

My wife says hello, and thanks you for the tea party after the inauguration. (Wasn't that funny when Quail started doing those imitations of Bill Cosby)

Have a really nice time, and remember - Read my lips - Don't worry - be ecstatic.

Cordially,

George Bush

Why does Marks need a B2??
What is the secret cargo??

Will I ever get paid for this??
STAY TUNED!!!
