S. STEPHENSON - Proprietor.

SATURDAY, MAY 30.

NOW, CHATHAM.

Some two hundred soldiers and about one hundred private citizens from Chatham attended the centenial celebration at St. Thomas this week.

What they saw there, the gorgeous y decorated and illuminated city, the myriad visitors—some 15,000 in all, it is estimated—the air of prosperity and success, the magnificent adverfisement to the young city, all impressed them.

"What a great thing it would be for Chatham."

Just think of the thousands of dollars left in that town." "It has advertised St. Thomas all-

THE PAVEMENT PROBLEM.

The good people of King street west are having a truly strenuous time over the selection of their new pavement. And it is to be hoped that, after all their agitation and anxiety, they will not have an inferior article masted upon them.

The Planet would suggest a visit to Detroit to the residents who so strongly favor sheet asphalt paving. So many invendoes have been distributed regarding the disinterestedmess-or otherwise-of the active supporters of the different pavements suggested, that we believe it best to targe every Doubting Thomas to go and see for himself the results from pavements laid in other cities.

A representative of The Planet visited Detroit this week and for himself examined the sheet asphalt paving laid there. It doesn't require an expert to reach results upon what

The sheet asphalt is being patched in almost every part of the city where it has been utilized, even where the patching is not going on, the pavement is cracked and uneven. It is also said that often watering is prohibited in certain portions on the sheet asphalt owing to the dangers of expansion and contraction.

But we believe every ratepayer interested should satisfy himself as to these facts. Why not make a tour of personal inspection if you are in doubt? The cost would be infinite small compared with the inconvenience, annoyance and expense of making the discovery after the pavement avas laid.

THE GIRLS OF ST. THOMAS.

Hats off to the charming St. Thomas girl!

And, incidentally, profuse and elaborate apologies to the gallant and discerning editor of the St. Thomas Times.

It is always sad to look back upon the mistakes of life-errors in judgment; haste and indiscretion in forming opinion. Yet when the editor of this great home journal meditates mpon the wordy warfare waged with

And let the St. Thomas maid come forth and take her place with her lovely Maple City sisters in the front rank of the nature's greatest artistic and soulful triumph our Canadian girls.

To the Clerical Gentlemen of Chat am-The time for the advent of short summer Sunday sermons is at hand Much can be said in few words.

The Woodstock Express, indepen dent, says: "Mr. Johnston accused Mr Blake of addressing his remarks to the people rather than to the court. But the people in this instance constitute the court of final appeal. If Mr. Blake did address his remarks to the people, rather than to the judges, he did, nothing very wrong. The judges heard the evidence, and are capable of putting their own construction on it; and after they have had their say, it will still remain for the people to give the final verdict."

The death in Paris of Paul Blouet (Max O'Rell) removes a familiar name from the papers and a familiar figure from the world of tight literature. His books and newspaper articles were widely read, because they were written in a style that suited them to the popular taste, and contained considerable evidence of real wit, some of it sharp and caustic but, for the most part, good natured and kindly. The book that made him famous was "John Bull and His Island," which was written after a brief residence in London, where he taught school and wrote for the newspapers. Others of his books that achieved some popularity were "Jonathan and His Continent, 'Jacques Bonhomme," "A Frenchman in America," and "Her Royal Highness Woman." It is not probable that many of his books will survive him long. Fresh from his pen they were readable, entertaining, perhaps in some measure instructive; but they were probably not intended to be permanent contributions to literature. Perhaps they served a good purpose in helping the people of different nationalities to see their oddities and their peculiarities as others saw them, and to see them presented in a manner that made it unpossible to take Cap Sullivan, the man who had been reported by the courts for bribery in the Ontario Government's behalf in West Huron election, was published last May by getting for $250 a Govr berth which he sold later for $9,000. Then this man, coniater for $9,000. Then this man, convicted of bribery and punished by a present of $8,000 odd, goes to Mr. Gamey to get Gamey to support the Ontario Government. In how many ways like that are "machine" men useful, and how numerously are they punished like Cap Sullivan?

POLICE'S MISTAKE

"Some people have no head for business at all, at all," remarked the wise guy as he filled his pipe with the tobacco he had begged and borrowed a match. "Take the police of this city for instance. Here they were making good money for the city by charging sidewalk cyclists $2.00 a ride, and now they have gone and killed a thriving and money-making scheme by raising the rates. Some people don't knew when they are well off. You see the police thought that they had a monopoly of the sidewalk. They controlled the only sidewalks in the city and they imagined that the wheelmen had to ride on their sidewalks, so they just boosted up the tariff. But the wheelmen fooled the police. They were quite willing to pay $2.00 for the privilege, but when the rate was raised to $5.50 the bicyclists just quit riding on the sidewalk. The police had seen how the Standard Oil Trust, the Steel Trust and the other trusts succeeded, so they thought that they could pull off standard off frust, the steet frust and the other trusts succeeded, so they thought that they could pull off one, too. The wheelmen, however, found that they got no trust at the police courf, so they objected to a trust being worked off on them, and they just quit riding on the sidewalks. Now the authorities were just a little short sighted. They could have gone on charging $2.0a for riding on the sidewalks and their revenue would have gone on growing and they didn't need to spend any of the profits in advertising, either. The police have made a big mistake, and I am going to tell them so the first time I see them," concluded the wise guy, and he went home to eat the supper his wife had earned by taking in washing.

WILLINERY I

A woman will never throw an olu t aside or even rive it away as as she believes there is a chance of making it over. She is ashamed to send it to a millinery store—in fact, a num-ber of milliners discourage such a custom by charging prices quite out of proportion with the work done. In some of the untown residence districts in Brooklyn young women go from house to house restoring brilliancy to faded headgear at nominal prices. Some of them, with taste for millinery, have built up a regular custom trade and have all the work they want to do. In a few hours they will transform an old hat or bonnet into one that looks "as good as new." Girls will help along the family income in this way, where they can choose their customers and their time, when nothing would persuade them to work in a millinery store or go behind a counter.— New York Times.

SINGING GLASSES.

How to Make a Musical Instrumen With Tumblers and Water.

There was once a man who studied the laws of nature to try to understand what they meant. People did not know. so much about nature as we do now and he was trying to teach himself by experiments. He tried things in various ways to see how they would behave under certain circumstances. Among other things he tried some wineglasses, tapping them with a stick to hear them ring. His wife thought it was a foolish waste of time to be playing with the wineglasses. It was not foolish if by his experiments he learned something new. One morning he came down early and left his wife asleep upstairs. Pretty soon she woke up suddenly and listened to very soft, sweet music. It seemed so fine and delicate she thought it must be the voices of angels singing somewhere. When she came down, she told him she had heard an angel singing. He smiled in a knowing way, for he knew what she had heard.

Get a couple of thin glass tumblers or goblets of the same size and a cream pitcher full of water. Place them on the table, with the two glasses on your right and the pitcher on the left. Now, with a wooden pencil held lightly be-tween the thumb and finger of the right hand gently tap the glasses on the side and near the top. They give out a ringing sound, but the two sounds are not alike. Pour the water in or out until the two sounds are exactly alike.

This was what the man of science was doing. He was tuning the glasses. You can now see that by adding water to the glasses we lower the pitch. The glass vibrates as we tap it, and these vibrations travel through the air to our ears, and we say we hear the sounds. A note is a continuous series of vibrations. The slower they move the lower the note. The water causes the glass to vibrate more slowly, and the more water the slower the vibrations, the lower the pitch. The bass strings in the plano are large, long and heavy: the high sounding strings are short, thin and light.

It is easy in this way to arrange eight glasses and to tune them one note apart and thus have an octave on which you can play a tune. To make complete octave it will be found best pick out glasses of different sizes tune them with water. The best to sound the glasses is to wet the finger and draw it lightly along the rim of the glass. This is the way musical glasses are played.
