From Thursday and Friday's Daily. ELECTION AND ITS LESSONS. The first regular election ever called a the Yukon territory is a thing of the ast. The people have been given an pportunity to speak their minds as to he men whom they desire to represent tem on the Yukon council, and the lot us fallen to Messrs. Wilson and Prudhomme, the nominees of the late citims' convention.

In the selection of these gentlemen here is a lesson which even he who mus may read. Rightly or wrongly, the candidacy of Messrs. O'Brien and Noel, the opposition candidates, was generally regarded as having been rought about through the agency of the overnment or its representatives. Such ras the position assigned them by all the advocates of Messrs, Prudhomme and Wilson and generally accepted by the people and voters at large. The lefeat of O'Brien and Noel may, thereore, be considered as a distinct conemnation of the past methods of administration which have prevailed in his territory. The people of the Yuion having suffered from the effects of had laws for a period of three years have seized the first opportunity to exmess themselves and they have done so in no uncertain voice.

whe same time there are features about the vote of yesterday which indified with ate very plainly that the judgment home of mnounced against the administration ancaster as for its past acts and not by reason log jail its attitude at the present time. Had ouse was Ir. Thomas O'Brien stood as a candilate for the same office six months ago rldom of the Nugget is of the opinion that he would not have polled one half the notes which were cast for him yesterday. In fact, had the election occurrei that length of time ago, no serioususs whatsoever would have been attached to the candidacy of any man slose name, by any hook or crook, could have been connected with the govf Anglement. In the last few months, a in 1727, wever, a gradual change has been ped the brought about. The government has an indenlegun to redeem its promises and with , through each change for the better in the laws rward was Anglesey there has been made manifest a little by a Las more widely spread feeling of confidaughter dence in the sincerity of the governt. as did ment's intentions. Property holders in Dawson must expect to pay a certain amount of taxes whether they have any direct voice in the selection of taxing power or not. It seems to us, therefore, that has lost entirely any weight it might once have possessed. The principal difficulty involved is to determine upon a charter which will meet the peculiar requirements of the situation. The opinion has been expressed before in these columns and we repeat it now, that a commission composed of representative citizens and members of the council would be able in the natural order of things to prepare a charter which should in every way be suited to circumstances. Such a commission would have the confidence of the people and would serve as a guarantee of protection to all interests concerned. Early action in this matter should be taken.

Messrs. Wilson and Prudhomme, the two gentlemen who have been elected as members of the Yukon council, have before them a term in office which in all probability will prove anything but pleasureable. They have been elected upon a platform which calls for a great many things which they will be unable to secure both for the reason that they constitute but a very small minority of in time for parade. There must have the council and for the further reason this objection to a town government that many of the demands concern matters over which the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction. It will be expected of the two elected members that they shall serve as a sort of information bureau to the Ottawa government and be ready at any and all times to furnish the federal authorities with an actual knowledge of what the Yukon come down to us. requires. If the new members meet all the expectations of their admirers they certainly have before them a herculean task.

Faith in the Camp.

Shortly atter the departure of Mr. C. D. Lane for San Francisco rumors were set afloat in Nome to the effect that he had been attacked with a severe spell of "cold feet" and also that he had gotten to the end of his financial rope, and that by reason of the failure of a black jack studded with brass-headed Editor Nugget : some of his mines to pay he would be forced to entirely suspend operations in he referred to the pies his mother Hayward, for the necessary assistance

It Had Advantages and Disadvantages -"Junior Sub's" Spicy Letter In Canadian Military Gazette.

It has always seemed to me that our knowledge of how the soldier of the Middle ages lived during those periods when he was not engaged in breaking the Ten Commandments amidst the applause of the historians is as sketchy as a Beardsley poster. He could not have been always engaged in raising lumps upon the heads of his opponents. He must have put in some of his time in making barrack damages and traveling in and out of the guardroom. There must have been times when he mislaid his can-opener and could not get into his galvanized iron regimentals been mornings when he came before the adjutant with a black eye in the green stage of recovery and a nose the size and color of a railway danger signal. Yet we never hear of them. Apparently, when the militiamen of the Middle ages was not biffing his enemies with a battle axe, he was leading the life of Marys' little lamb. For not one atom of his criminal record, not one page of his defaulter sheet, has ever

Yet, we know that barrack life in the Middle ages was very much like what it is now-more especially in the married lines. We know that it was as much as the mediaeval warrior's life was worth to fall into the kitchen when his wife was doing the colonel's wife's washing. We know that the Moyen age consort could hurl a 7-pound flatiron with a force that even a brass undershirt would fail to withstand. And we feel by intuition that, whether the soldier wore chain mail or relied upon knife across the dinner table when his comments upon the cookery had reached the point where her feminine endurance gives way must have seemed a mere pleasantry. Even a 7-pound flatiron would hardly have ranked higher than a gentle, hint. And it is hardly likely that even a mediaeval heroine could have ruled her household with a steam-hammer. How, then, could she convey her misapprobation to a man who dined in a cast-iron tuxedo, with nickel collar and cuffs, and who could walk down afterwards to the club with a peaceful smile under a shower of household utensils that would have made Cronje suffer? This is a point on which the historians do not enlighten us. Yet, she must have got square with him some way. And when he came-home sideways at 2 o'clock in the morning and tried to open the postern of the castle with the handle of his battle-axe, what did she do then? He could not take off his knees as we can. He must have made as much noise as the riverting shop in a boiler factory before he could even shed his tin overcoat. So, she evidently had ample warning of his approach. Yet, we are without one single word as to what tactics she adopted for his discomfiture. That she did discomfort him, that she made him feel as small as a homoepathic globule and as mean as a plugged nickel we can readily believe. For there never was a man yet in the history of this world, from the time when Noah first predicted a wet spell; and Mrs. Lot gave us a dreadful example of the reward of "rubbernecking," that was able to cope with the wife of his bosom under such circumstances. But whatever his punishment was, it did not compare with that we encounter in these days of rapid transit. The mediaeval militiaman had many points in his favor. His uniform was an advantage that must have compensated for many shortcomings in the domestic circle, even if he was occasionally mistaken for the hall stove by some of the country visitors.-The Jun-
