Tea is Delicious and Pure

Sealed Packets Only - Never in Bulk. BLACK, MIXED or NATURAL GREEN

HER HUMBLE == LOVER ==

of all voices save the church-bells. Lord Delamere, in his deepgrave voice, that is faintly tremulous for a moment with emotion, says:

"My friends and neighbors, in the name of my beloved wife and myself,
I beg to thank you with heartfelt gratitude for your kindly welcome. I thank you all the more deeply and kindly inasmuch as feel that I have done nothing to deserve it."

done nothing to deserve it."
"Yes, yes," shouts a voice. "Us and ours have earned a sight o' money at the Grange o' late, my lord!"

"Of late, perhaps," he says, grave-ly; "but I cannot forget that for years I have been a stranger to you, and that my house has atood in your midst desolate and deserted. But it shall be so no longer—" A burst of cheering breaks in upon this promise.

"I have returned to live amongst you. I hope, for many years; and from the bottom of my heart I trust that you will have no cause to regret the welcome which you have accorded my wife and myself. Friends and neighbors, you will increase this pleasure you have afforded us if you will visit us to-morrow; come with your wives and your children, and we will see if we cannet make merry in the old hall as your forefathers and mine used to do in the by-gone years. We will eat our supper together at eight have returned to live amongst will eat our supper together at eight o'clock. Once more we thank you most sincerely, most gratefully!"

CHAPTER XXXVI. There is not much eloquence in the speech, but plain and unvarnished as it is, stirs the hearts of the simple yillage people, and they receive it with a tremendous shout. "We'll come, my lord!' shouts a arrdy voice. "God bless your lordsturdy voice. "God bless your lord-ship and send long life to you and her pretty young ladyship!" At these last artless words, Signa, who has been listening, pale and ex-cited, with tears trickling down her cheeks, flushes crimson; young girl runs forward and drops an immense bunch of white ing bursts out again, a hurried mur-mur flashes through the crowd, and there is a sudden, swift rush to the front of the carriage.

In a twinkling the horses are led from the bar, and twenty stout fishermen and laborers grasp the pole, and with a shout start off with the carriage, leaving the horses prancing and pawing in the hands of the astorished but delighted coachman. In this triumphant fashion my Lord and Lady Delamere are conveyed to the entrance where the Grange party, surrounded by servants, stand to receive and welcome them. With innate good feeling and delicacy the crowd, having effected their purpose, give one cheer more and quietly retire, leaving Archie dancing In a frenzy of delight on the top of the stone balustrade, and Signa clasped in Lady Rookwell's embrace.

For the first time in her life the old lady cannot find words, but still holding Signa by one arm intwined around her, pats her on the back with a trembling hand.

"My dear," she says, at last, "this is the happiest day of my life. And—will somebody knock that urenth of? that stone wall before he falls and breaks his neck." licetor laughting lifts Archie from perilous emineare, and somenow by all manage to get into the hall. "When you have just done with her aunt. I should like to say 'liow do you do." says Laura Derwent. How do you do, my dear? Let me look at you. Why, you don't look a bit like an

had been very lil!"

Signa laughs, her eyes shining like stars, her chesks dashed with pure, analloyed joy.

If I had been doing, I think those fil had been ding, I think those dear people would have cured met she says. "Ah! and I am so gled to get back, sun, uncle!" and she gives them a Tand each, and kisses Mrs. Podswell's sharp face affectionately. The could love her bitterest foe, if she had one, this morning. Then she looks round quickly, and her color comes and goes as she sees Sir Frederic standing a little apart, his faca very pale, his eyes grave and wistful.

With a quick imputse she glides toward him, and holds out her hand.
Sir Frederic, it would not have seemed like coming tioms if you had not been here; and thank you, thank you, for all you have done."

He takes her hand, holds it for a nument, then presses it and in all nice releases it.

"Blyte, how are you?" exclaims Hector, grasping his band and wringing it, almost like a schoolboy. "I've been looking forward to seeing you. You'll have to plead guilty to this Pale and red by turns, Signa leans forward; the crowd suddenly grows silent, and begins to press closer to the carriage, and amidst the sudden the carriage, and amidst the sudden as the church. superfluous torrent of chatter. Of course, they have enough to say to each other to last for a month; but we'll give them half an hour. I can just wait that time, and no longer, for I am almost starving!" and he leads them away. "Where's you maid, dear?" asks Laura.

Signa laughs quietly.

Signa laughs quietly.
"I haven't one. You see. I don't care about it, and Hector.—"
"Well, Hector, what?" Cemands Ladv Rookwell, as they make their way to Signa's dressing room. "Well. Hector has got into the habit of coming in and out while I'm dress-ing, and sitting about to talk; sometimes he smokes a cigarette, and, of course, a maid would be scandalized.

"As you couldn't live without him at As you condin't live without him at you apron strings, you do without a maid," says Lady Rookwell, succinctly. "My dear, you are one of those anomalies we read about but seldom

"What is it that I am?" asks Signa. as Laura ridis her of her furs.
"That ridiculous object, a wife who is in love with her own hustand."

s in love with ner cons.
Signa laughs and blushes.
Signa laughs and blushes. "Is it so ridiculous?" she says.
"Well, it is true. I am very much.
awfully in love with him, and so would you be if you knew him. I can't help it!" six adds so wilveit that. she adds, so naively that Laura bursts into a laugh. "Nothing will ever elter you, my dear?" she says. "Here have you been queening it in Paris—oh, we heard all about it!—and going through the most awful scenes and are the prost as the same of the sam about it!—and going through the most awful scenes, and yet you come back to us just as you left, the simplest dearest of children! What lovely salles!" taking up the heavy, almost unique set, and holding them with awed rapture almost at arm's length." I saw them half a mile off. Wearway.

I saw them half a mile off. Wherever lid you get them-"There she is!" exclaims Lady Rook-

"There she is!" exclaims Lady Rook-well. "Dress, dress, dress before all things. There is not much of the child about you, Laura!"
"Hector got them from a Russian Princess who had lost all her money at Monaco. A lady who crossed with us said they were the most perfect the had ever seen." the had ever seen."

They must have cost a fortune!"

exclaims Laura, under her breath.

"Yes; I never thought anyone could Yes; I never thought anyone could be so extravagant as Hector is. He buys everything he thinks that I have the slightest fancy for, and yet I have to scold him into ordering clothes for himself. himself," and she laughs.

"Put those things down!" exclaims Lady Rookwell. "Now, my dear, Jon't pay any attention to her, but Lady Rookwell.

don't pay any attention to her, but tell me about yourself. You have been very ill?"

"Yes," says Signa, simply. "But I am so glad, so thankful that I kept well until he had quite recovered. I suppose I was very ill. It was very hard upon Hector, for he had to nurse me; I said that we ought both to go into a hospital. And that dear, good doctor! I shall never forget him or doctor! I shall never forget him or on his kindness. He never left me for a moment for a whole day! But I am all right. I nave been quite well for a long time; I grew better from the day they told me that we could start for home. "That was what I wanted I wanted to see the hills, and to hear the sea—to know that we were in England. I hate "—and her eves flash——"I hate the continent. But this"—and she goes to the window—"this is Fradise!"

The crowd of guests file in in twos

Ints is for me, and Blythe, to find out," he says, laying his hand upon Sir Frederic's shoulder.

They solve the problem somehow, for on the morrow nearer three than the mounted present themselves for admission to the Grange, and Hector and Sir Frederic are ready for them.

As in olden times, the huge hall has long tables set up within it, and the tables are spread with good, solid food. There is food in abundance, and plenty of sound Cctober ale and cider.

The crowd of guests file in in twos

"Stop! You have not heard me out!"

"Really! My dear Laura." and she takes a step toward her.

"Stop! You have not heard me out!"

10, 20, 50 and 100 lb. Bags.

Signa laughs "No! It is the new life to me! You will see! I am so strong! And I only want to be happy! It isn't much, is it?" and she laughs. "And I shall, be, ah, so happy! What a lovely room this is! Does Hector's room face the south? He likes the south side"—with sudden anxiety.

"Make your mind, cone." care Lady.

"Make your mind easy," says Lady Rookwell, grimly. "His room adjoins this. He will be able to come in and smoke his horrid cigarette as usual.
"I am so glad!" says Signa, simply
"Yes, its so nice to smell of tobac co smoke when you come down to din ner."

"Oh, cigarettes don't smell," says

"Oh, cigarettes don't smell," says Signa, naively. "But is there no news?"
"None," says Laura, comprehensively. "Nothing happens in Northwell. You bring all the news with you. Oh, there is one pieco of news," she says, with an air of indifference that is too marked. "Sir Frederic has lost a coustn, so that he etands next to the earldom of Reylade." to the earldom of Rexlade."

"Really. Then he will be Lord Rex-

"Really. Then he will be Lord Rexlade?" says Signa. "I shall always feel like calling him Sir Fredric, How altered he is! I don't mean facially so much as in manner."
"Do you think so?" says the beauty with affected carelessness. 'Yes, he is altered—for the better. If you knew how hard he has worked! He has worked as hard for you as your Hector, worked for me. I don't think Lord Delamere will find a single screw loose on the whole estate."
"A screw loose!" moans Lady Rookwell. "That's a lady-like expres-"A screw loose!" moans Lady Rookwell. "That's a lady-like expression

"How very good of him!" says Sig na.

Then comes a knock at the door, and a demure servant hands in bouquet of choice hot-house flowers.

"For me?" says Signa, as Lady

Rookwell hands them to her.
"So it says," says her ladyship, pointing to the label.

"For Lady Delamere, with Lady Blyte's love and good wishes!" reads Signa. 'How kind and thoughtful! Oh stop!" and she runs to the door and calls to the maid. "Tell the mesand calls to the maid. "Tell the messenger to give my love to Lady Blyte, and that I will come and see her to morrow," she says.
For some unexplained and mysterious reason, Laura jumps up and kiss es her.

es ner.
"You are a dear good girl!" she have with a vivid blush, and hastily disengaging herself from Signa's embrace, she hurries quickly from the

"What—what does she mean? Why should she be so pleased that I sent the message?" asks Signa, wonderingly; but Lady Rookwell only grins and grunts an unsatisfactory "Humph!" It is a very happy party that sits down in the small dining-room that evening

Hector is in the best of spirits-almost boyish in his cheerfulness—so much so that it is difficult to realize that he is my Lord of Delamere, with fifty thousand a year, and the ribbon of the order of the Knights of the "Lady Bumbleby ought to be here," says Lady Rookwell, with a grin.

"So she shall, before long," he says. I look upon Lady Bumbleby as "I look upon Lady Bumbleby as a dear friend, who understands a good ctory to the fullest. I tell you what, Lady Rookwell, we will have high times this Christmas, so prepare yourself! The Grange has been empty and silent long enough. Why, I've read how, in the old times, the old place was crammed with guests, and that the servants' hall was filled to overflowing half the nights of the year. flowing half the nights of the year Why shouldn't it be so now?"

"Why not? I know no reason against it," says Signa.

And he looks across the table at her gratefully.

"I expect it will be full enough to-morrow," he says.
"To-morrow?" demands Lady Rookwell. "Yes," he adds; "I've asked all Northwell here to morrow—men, wo-men and children. We will have such a night of it as has not been known or the last twenty years—ah, the last fifty

"What!" shricked Lady Rookwell. "Do again?" "I am not afraid," he says, looking at Signa "Signa is never so happy as when she is making other people hap-py; and happiness does not kill—it cures, Lady Rookwell."

"How are you going to feed two hundred people?" demands her ladyship.
"This is for me, and Blythe, to find out," he says, laying his hand upon Sir Frederic's shoulder.
They solve the problem somehow, for on the morrow nearer three than of sound October ale and cider.

The crowd of guests file in in twos Paradise!"
"You'll be ill again" says Lady Rookwell, decisively. "All this will be too much fer you, mark my words."

The crowd of guests file in in twos and threes, and "the gentry," taking the place of servants for the time betoo much fer you.

permanent popularity.

True to his word, and passing be-yond the mere spirit of it, my Lord of Delamere and his friends join in the repast, at the upper end of the table, seven o'clock dinner having been dispensed with; and when, at the close of the meal, he rises, and announces that there will be a dance to finish the evening, a lusty cheer greets his words.

To set an example, he chooses the comely wife of one of his own tenants and opens the ball, and Signa, not to be behindhand, accepts a young farmer on the estate of her partner. No one enters into the spirit of the thing more thoroughly than Laura Derwent, and clad in one of her choicest costumes, she leads to the quadrille the oldest farmer on the estate.

The band is the village one, and it tries its hardest to eclipse the London one, which discoursed sweet music at Laura Derwent's ball; and if it does not quite succeed. It makes music fa-miliar to the ears of the guests, and, therefore, quite as satisfactory.

Never, perhaps, has Signa been happier than she is to-night, and when, in a pause of the festivities, Hector finds a pause of the festivities, Hector finds time to approach and address her, he finds her laughing heartily at some fishing story told by a ruddy-cheeked young fisherman who had summoned up courage to ask her to dance.

The ball is kept up until midnight, and at its finish the guests group together to give a hearty cheer to my Lord and Lady Delamere.

"Are you tired, my darling?" he asks, as, alone, they stand in the deserted and silent ballroom.

"No," she says, "and 'yes' I am a lit-tle tired, but, ah! so happy, Hector! After all, these simple people are ours. There is not one of them for whose comfort and happiness we are not an swerable! I used to wonder what use a great lady could be. Now I understand. It is to make the people under her happy and contented. Hector, I shall be content to live amongst them for the remainder of my days!"

But she had not to do this. There comes a certain period of the year when my Lord of Delamere finds it imperative for him to be in London. There is his seat in the House of Lords, amid his brother peers, and at such periods Signa has to take up the role as the mistress of the great house in Grosvenor square.

And she plays it well. If she chose she could be the queen of the high society in which she moves; but she does not choose. It is not in her to be a professional beauty or a leader of She leaves all that to less happy individuals.

Still her dances and her evenings are crowded by the best people, and to have a card for one of Lady Delamere's "At home's" is a passport to the best of society.

Laura Derwent still reigns. Deauty undimmed and unfaded, beauty undimmed and unfaded, is still the talk of the town, and her photographs may still be seen in the shop windows; but a change has come over this flighty damsel; and in her off-hours, as she calls the rare inter-vals when she had no party or ball to attend, she finds her way to Signa's house in Grosvenor square, and spends the evening there.

Sir Frederic is now Lord Rexlade. He bears the title nicely and modestly. He, too, is always to be seen at Lady Delamere's assemblies, always near her elbow, and ready to carry any message or undertake any commission. He loves her, but it is, as he told Lady Rookwell, the love of a brother for a

One day, late in spring, Laura comes to Signa's dressing room, where she is in the hands of her maid, who is attiring her for the coming levee.
"Signa," says Laura, impulsively, "I want to speak to you. Send the girl way." Signa gently dismisses the maid, and "What is it dear?" "Signa, you will be surprised; I know you will?"

Shall 1? What is it, Laura, dear?" "I don't know how to tell you, and yet I feel as if I must! Frankly, I Frankly, 1 feel as if I couldn't do it, unless you concurred!" "What are you going to do?" asks Signa, smiling.

"Something very dreadful and con-in twos taking 'Stop! You have not heard me out!

You don't know who it is! It is Sir ime be'Frederic-I mean Lord Rexlade!"
"With a joyous cry Signa hugs her to her bosom; then lie holds her out at arms' length, and laughs. "You dear, stupid creature! Why I he holds her out laughs.

"You dear, stupid creature! Why I guessed it long ago! Any one could see he was madly in love with you! Dear Sir Frederic—I mean Lord Rexlade! Oh, I am so glad!"

"Are you really?" demands the beauty. "I thought—forgive me, Signa!—that you would be—well, jeal-ous! He has been your slave so long!"

"My slave!" says Signa, with a blush. "I only want one slave, and that is Hector. And here he comes! Good-bye, dear! I am happier that. I can tell you! You will be Lady Rexlade, and we shall be close neighbors! lade, and we shall be close neighbors! And they say there is no such thing as Fate! Kiss me, Laura! You and I as Fate! Kiss me, Laura! You and a will be that anomalous article which dear Lady Rookwell called unique—wives in love with their husbands!"

(The End).

UNIQUE IN ANIMALS.

Racoons Have a Curious Habit of Washing Their Food.

Few American wild animals are Few American wild animals are more widely known or excite more popular interest than the raccoon, which occupies most of the wooded parts of North America from the southern border of Canada to Panama, with the exception of the higher mountain ranges tain ranges.

Its diet is extraordinarily varied and Its diet is extraordinarily varied and includes fresh water clams, crawfish, frogs, turtles, birds and their eggs, poultry, nuts, fruits and green corn. When near water raccoons have a curious and unique habit of washing their food here. food before eating it. Their fondness for green corn leads them into fre-quent danger, for when bottom land corn tempts them away from their uscorn tempts them away from their usual haunts raccoon hunting with dogs at night becomes an especially favored sport. Raccoons are extraordinarily intelligent animals and make interest.

ing and amusing pets.

They began to figure in our frontier They began to rigure in our frontier literature at an early-date. Coonskin caps ,with the ringed tails hanging like plumes, made the favorite headgear of many ploneer hunters, and consisting were recognized articles of coonskins were recognized articles barter at country stores. Now that the increasing occupation of the country is crowding out more and more of our wild life it is a pleasure to note the persistence with which these characteristic and interesting animals con-tinue to hold their own in so much of their of ginal range.—National Geo

THEATRE AUDIENCES.

A Sermon for Those Who Arrive Late and Depart Early.

It is one of the most hallowed national customs not to go into a theatre until the curtain has risen. If by some stupid blunder we have arrived punc-tually we smoke a cigarette in the lobby.

So the cunning playwright takes care not to start his story until at least five minutes later. He occupies these five minutes with a colorless scene of some kind just to keep the groundlings amused. In some cases he will begin each act in the same way. It depends on how fashionable his audience is and how thirsty. For a converse reason he must finish his play five minutes before the final curtain falls.

Another of our national customs is to leave the theatre the moment Edwin has embraced Angelina, although the author may have reserved a quaint comedy touch or a dramatic surprise for the actual end.

It is no use altering the hour of perfermance. Begin at midnight if you like; we shall not come until five minfermance. Begin at midnight if utes after. Leave off at 10; we shall go out five minutes before. It is in the blood The idea that an audience owes any consideration to authors or actor is entirely foreign to us. The very suggestion of it is almost an imperti nence.-Louis N. Parker, in New York

The Wild Pigeon Mystery.

That the wild pigeon, once so common in the United States, has become extinct is one of the strangest mysteries in American natural history. It is a puzzle which has baffled scientists and which probably never will be solved. Half a century ago wild pigeons were abundant in Pennsylvania, Ohio Indiana, Kentucky and all the states of the middle west. In their migra-tions they travelled in flocks number-ing tens of thousands, and it some-times took a single flock the better part of an hour to pass a given point. Vast numbers of the pigeons were kill-ded every year by gunners, but many investigators hold that the complete disappearance of the species must have been due in part at least to other causes. No other bird was ever so numerous in this country as the

A Gargle for a Sore Throat.

The kind of sore throat which an roys one when the weather is unpleasant and the air feels raw and damp, is not difficult to treat, and a speedy cure is always possible. The red appearance of the throat indicates a mild degree of consestion, whilch may be relieved by garding the throat with hot (as hot as can be borne without burning) soda water. Dissolve a tea-spoonful of sodium bicarbonate in a tumblerful of hot water. Use this strength and gargle thoroughly every three hours. Also take a saline laxa-tive—such as Rochelle salts, a heaping teaspoonful in a tumblerful of colf water—at bedtime, and another dose upon rising in the morning. It is al-ways advisable to remain indoors for 24 or more hours when having a mild attack of sore throat.

Imitation Gems.

The opal is more difficult to imitat than is the diamond. But, from artiff clal alum, rubies which really are ru bles can be made, and very cheaply If the coloring agent is titanium ox-ide the product becomes a genuine ar-tifical sapphire. Only in interior struc-ture do these stones differ from those made by nature.

SUMMER COMPLAINTS KILL LITTLE ONES

At the first sign of illness during the hot weather give the little one Baby's Own Tablets, or in a few hours he may be beyond cure. These Tablets will prevent summer complaints if given occasionally to the well child and will promptly cure these troubles if they come on suddenly. Baby's Own Tab-lets should always be kept in every home where there are young chil-There is no other medicine as good and the mother has the guaran-tee of a government analyst that they are absolutely safe. The Tablets are asold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Wil-llams Medicine Co., Brockville. Ont.

IRISH SPANIARDS.

America Did Not Get All Em', grants of the Emerald Isle.

"You are, perhaps, too much inclined to think," said a Spaniard recently. "that America is the only foreign country where Irish emigrants land. But there is an Irish element in Spain, though less numerous, also important. It is probable that the special conditions of this old country, its Catholic faith, its monarchical spirit, and noble traditions, particularly attracted the more distinguished Irish families in Search of a new home while the midmore distinguished irish lamilies in Search of a new home, while the middle and poorer classes preferred to sail to more democratic and English-speaking lands.

"This would explain why most of

This would explain why most of the Irish-Spaniards belong to the army. The Spanish army lists abounds with names like O'Shea, O'Connor, MacKenna, O'Neil, earl of Tyrone, became a Spanish field marshal, and in the Carlist wars won the title of Marquis del Norte. His son, though an officer in the Spanish infeator, was here. quis del Norte. His son, though an of-ticer in the Spanish infantry, was bet-ter known as a poet. Another poet of Irish descent died recently in Madrid, Fernandez Shaw. And the name of General O'Donnell is as famous in Spain as that of Wellington in Eng-hand. General O'Donnell was in com-mand of the Spanish treory which the mand of the Spanish troops which invaded Morocco in the last years of Queen Isabella's reign, and his triumphant march was only checked by the diplomatic opposition of England.

"Most of these Irish-Spaniards emigrated during the first half of the nineteenth century. They were quickly ineteenth century. They were quickly absorbed by Spain—a country which quickly stamps her character on new-comers—and hardly any of their present representatives speak English, or have any knowledge of English and Irish life, But they carry everywhere their family tales of a dark past and their names as witnesses of their family romance, and their influence is no doubt overwhelming on the general opinion which Spain, ignorant of the progress of later years still entertains on the 'oppressed sister island.' "Another important, link between Ireland and Spain is the Irish semin Ireland and Spain is the Irish seminary for Roman Catholic priests still existing in Salamanca. It creates a continuous channel of communications for the clergy of the two countries. It must be added that the very numerous wealthy families who wish to give their daughters an English education generally place them in English-speaking convents, either in Spain or in England. These convents are generally Irish."—Exchange:

We're All Like Her.

Terence V. Powderly, of labor fame, as talking about compulsory arbitration. "The trouble withh the world in general," he said, thoughtfully, is that we all know just what the other fellow ought to do, but we take little account of what we ought to do our

"I found a young bride one day bending, with a stern and severe air, over a dry looking volume.

"'What are you reading?" I asked.
"'An excellent work,' she replied. called 'Happiness in Marriage.'" "'What advice,' I asked, 'does it give to wives?"

'I don't know,' she answered. 'I'm reading the advice to husbands.

Compressed Air Pressure

The highest known pressure to which air has been compressed is 4,000 atmospheres (about 60,000 pounds) per square inch, but this was a laboratory experiment. The safe limit of pressure for use in the arts to-day is largely determined by the strength of the retaining vessel, or 3,000 pounds per square inch. To obtain these great pressures especially designed air compressors have to be contructed.

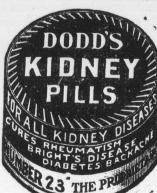

Cheese Salad.

'Tis easily made. And very nutritious. Have you some cottage cheese? Well, season it with melted butter. Add to this a little paprika and mus-

Roll into balls with pitted cherries the centre.
Place each on a disk of nicely toast-

Piped mayonnaise makes a very tasty and effective dish.

Bella-I wonder who was the first woman to get her gowns from Partstella—Helen of Troy, no doubt.—

Made in one grade only—the highest!

was a favorite name among the long-forgotten food products of half a century ago, just as it is among the live ones of to-day. Only exceptional quality can explain such

"Let Redpath Sweeten it."