A Frontier Missionary's Experiences

Sowing the seeds of Christianity in the far West some years ago was a mission attended with more or less danger, great hardships and much self-denial. Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, who was a missionary on the frontier, and who has since won much fame as an author, has written a series of articles for The Ladies' Home Journal graphically narrating his experiences—often thrilling in the extreme, again pathetic, and not infrequently, humorous. These he has related in his interesting way, which will make them exceedingly attractive, and which will show better than anything else which has ever been written that Americans are instinctively a religious people, ready to suffer any sacrifice for the advancement of Christianity. The first article of the series will appear in the April Journal.

Social Mistakes.

Perhaps the greatest of all social mistakes is to be continually talking about oneself. There is no word in all the vocabulary of conversation so tedious to others as that personal pronoun "I." Though one of the smallest words in use, there is none that takes up more room in the everybody world. "I" is a bore. It is better not to mention his name often than to say it continually. Another social folly is "gush." There is an insincere ring about it. True, there are people who gush from sheer good nature in wishing to give pleasure, yet they should remember that even amiable exaggeration is like a coarse sugar plum, agreeable at first, but leaving a doubtful taste in the mouth afterward.

On the other hand, there is a certain class of people in society who are equally foolish in going to the other extreme. They feign indifference about everybody and everything seldom expressing either interest or admiration. They think it "bad form" to show any pleasure in life, and a sign of superiority to be incapable of enthusiasm.

A social folly is to imagine that people are always looking at or thinking of you. Such ideas are often the offspring of conceit. As a matter of fact, the people very often look at you without seeing or thinking of you. They have other things to think of. If we could only convince ourselves that we are not always the pivot of our friends' and acquaintances' thoughts, there would be fewer hurt feelings and imaginary grievances.—Spokane Spokesman Review.

Value of the Sun's Rays.

Professor Sinclair says that many know by experience that the relief afforded by the sun's rays to wearing pain, neuralgia and inflammatory is more effective and lasting than that of any application whatever. These who have faceache should prove it for themselves, sitting in a sunny window, where the warmth falls full on the cheek. For nervous debility and insomnia the treatment of all others is rest in the sunshine. There is no tonic like it, provided the good effects are not neutralized by ill-feeling. To help a rheumatic limb, or to bring a case of nervous prostration up speedily, a most efficient part of the treatment would be to expose the limb or the person as many hours to direct sunlight as the day would afford.

For the chilliness which causes the blue hands and bad color resort to the sun—let it almost blister the skin, and the circulation will answer the attraction. It is a finer stimulant than wine, electricity, or massage, and was one of the verge of great therapeutic discoveries concerning it.

A "Practical" Joke.

An Irishman took a contract to dig a public well. When he had dug about 25 feet down, he came on morning and found it caved in—filled nearly to the top.

Pat cautiously looked round and saw that no one was near, then took off his hat and coat and hung them on the windlass, crawled into some bushes and waited events. In a short time the citizens discovered that the well had caved in, and seeing Pat's hat and coat on the bottom of the excavation.

Only a few hours of brick digging cleared the loose earth from the well. Just as the eager citizens had reached the bottom and were wondering where the body was, Pat came walking out of the bushes and good-naturedly thanked them for relieving him of a sorry job.

Some of the tired diggers were disgusted, but the joke was too good to allow of anything more than a hearty laugh, which soon followed.—London Answers.

"You raise some tremendously large families here in Kentucky."

"Yes, sah. We have to. Got to keep the feuds going, sah."

Mamma (anxiously watching her little boy at dinner)—My dear child, you really should not eat your pudding so quickly.

Small child—Why not, mamma? Mamma—Because it is dangerous. I once knew a little boy about your age who was eating his pudding so quickly and he died before he had finished it.

Small Child (with concern)—And what did he do with the rest of his pudding, mamma!

JINGLES AND JESTS.

The Imaginary World. Some folks there be who say it's wrong to sleep instead of work. They bid me toil with might and main and never, never sleep. But when asleep I'm dreaming; when awake, I see what's true. If I should get insomnia, I don't know what I'd do!

There are no duty rafters in the castle slumber years, And 'em the apparitions which surround a couch All vanish in an instant, while fair prospects glide in view. If I should get insomnia, I don't know what I'd do!

The thunder of cannon and the angry battle cry Are lost to consciousness in one short drooping of an eye. The crazy machinations of this weary earth are through. If I should get insomnia, I don't know what I'd do!

The Post Again. Still farther wandered the post afield and paused not until he came upon the figure of another farmer.

"The man with the hoe in south!" sighed the post confidently. "Why don't you call a spade a spade?" cried the farmer, with much heat and quite unreasonably. For, although the truth of the matter was that the farmer was digging for fish bait, of course it was not to be expected that the post would take cognizance of this.—Detroit Journal.

The Silent Hero. We have heard in song and story Of one who hid his name, And he all embodies the glory Of one who hid his name.

It's a very noble calling To arise with gun in hand, While the sun his leaves are falling For the honor of the land; But remember, there's the glory, When the battle has been won, To be praised in song and story, As "the man behind the gun."

There's another sort of hero, And of him the poet's pen Never writes; he's but sore In the books of "Middle Men." Not for gallant deeds is he meant, Yet with tongue in cheek he'll say: He must suffer mental torment, Nor so much as raise his hand, Though his enemies should blind him, He must let it go at that. He's the hero you'll find down, He's "the man behind the hat."

The Savage Bachelor. "If you had been at the Browns' golden wedding celebration last night," said the sweet young thing, "you would have altered your views on matrimony."

"I wouldn't either," said the savage bachelor. "If matrimony were not a fake, there would not be such a powder raised over a couple that have managed to endure each other for a few years, and don't you forget it!"—Indianapolis Press.

What of the Mate? I read about the heavy gun, The heavy and the light— The kind that weighs a score of tons And scales the light's bright. And yet, it seems so strange to me, The fatter of heavy guns, Of light and light, of French and White, But caught about the middle!

How does he stand the battle crash? He gains some else his nose. No both his heels together flash When he's like to lose the nose. Of course I like to hear the news Of wassel and of Yule, But how detested they write no word about the army smile.

Bachelor. Yeast—See this suit I've got on? Crumbeled—Of course I see it! What of it? "Well, my tailor wouldn't let me pay a cent for it!" "What?" "Why, I refused to take it without pay, but he insisted that I should take it as a gift."

"Well, well, that's rather unusual to have a tailor press a suit of clothes on you!"—Yonkers Statesman.

He Was a Bachelor. "Please play for me your favorite now!" He pleadingly brought his horn. "Oh, come," said she, "I'll play you now A nocturne by a great composer." He smiled, and then as readily As a hawk's little glance he threw her. He interposed in tone of plea, "A nocturne is a great composition."

The Chop and the Cherry Tree. "Popkin loves to be historically correct." "What's his latest?" "He had an English chop for breakfast on Washington's birthday."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Consistent Profession. It has often been said of the medical tribe That they seldom will swallow the acid they prescribe; Yes, because they may not think their jalap is nice, They will profit derive from their own good advice.—Chicago Record.

A Raise. Sandy Ploak—"What did yer feel like when de farmer pulled yer out of de well?" Billy Conigate—I felt like I was brought up on a farm.—Chicago News.

The Detachment. He loved her for her wondrous hair, So marvelously rich, But when he saw it in a chair Love's train of thought, just then and there, Was wrecked by a misplaced switch.—Singer's Magazine.

The Way It Works. "Young man, don't you know you spend too much money on the theater?" "Yes, I know it, but I am too poor to ever get any business, you know."—Indianapolis Press.

Consolation. If the winds blow cold, dear brother, And the air is keen and raw, Remember the coldest weather Comes just before the thaw.—Philadelphia North American.

Safe Enough. "Sit," she exclaimed, "you kissed me!" "Oh, well, never mind," he replied reassuringly; "I have no faith in that germ theory!"—Philadelphia North American.

Omar Khayyam. We've had our share of sorrow, As he sat on his colorless rug, When he spoke of a blushing old desert. He referred to his empty old jug!—Saracove Herald.

Often in the morning there comes a feeling of weariness, indescribable; not exactly ill, nor fit to work, but too near well to remain idle. A Ripans Tabule taken at night, before retiring, or just after dinner, has been known to drive away that weariness for months.
