Croup Comes Suddenly

ABOUT midnight the child awakes coughing—that peculiar, metallic cough called croup, and which strikes terror to the mother's heart. Then begins the struggle for breath, and if relief is to be obtained treatment must be prompt and effective.

Anyone who has tested Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linsced and Turpentine as a cure for croup will not hesitate to pronounce it an unqualified success. It is wonderfully prompt in loosening the cough, clearing the air passages of the head, and soothing the excited nerves.

There are imitations of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linsced and Turpentine. Be sure you see the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, on the bottle you buy. 25 cents a bottle; family size, three times as much, 60 cents; at all dealers, or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

The Coal Beds OF BYLOT ISLAND.

Beds of coal within the Arctic circle. Traces of a once mild climate, where now all is sterile, cold and inhospitable. What vistas are opened to our minds by the thought. One lives to dwell on it, and in fancy to go back to the dim ages ere man had had a place upon the earth, to witness a world in the making. We stand in awe at the contemplation of the consummate wisdom displayed in the economy of nature. These tribulations through which our globe has passed, those mighty forces of fire and frost and deluge, of earthquake, of crumpling and folding, of elevation and depression were not accidental, rather they were the means by which an all-wise Providence moulded and fitted this world for the reception of man. Who can conceive of a wisdom superior to that which has by depressing as they were formed, one below the other, those thick and rank vegetable growths that we are digging out to-day as coal, multiplied as it were, the surface of our globe, by heaping one layer upon or above the other, as we put books upon a shelf, much space for new growth has been made available, whilst the superincumbent weight of strata was compressing the lower beds into a compact and hard mass that occupies but a small proportion of its original bulk. Were it not that the Almighty has preserved to us those ancient forests in the form of coal, I cannot think of how man could have attained to his present position in the arts and sciences. We are, of course, becoming more and more independent of coal, as we learn how to utilize the vast water powers of the Continents both directly and indirectly. We are coming more and more to rely upon electricity, and it may be that eventually we will be altogether independent of coal, at any rate in countries that have abundant water powers as in Newfoundland.

Those lignitic coal beds of Bylot Island tell a story of a once mild climate that existed within the Arctic Circle, long ere the history of man had begun. Those plants are now presented to us in the form of coal, once covered the land with a verdant mantle. The hum of insect life was heard mingled perhaps with the song of birds. A long period of slow submergence, marked the deposition of those beds, and culminated in the great glacial epoch, which terminated the period of temperate climate conditions and ushered in the long season of refrigeration during which vast accumulated vast sheets of ice and snow which spread over the Northern hemisphere. Traces of the ice sheet may be met with as far south as the great Salt Basin of Utah. In Newfoundland we have abundant evidence of the prevalence of ice, in great mountains or mounds and ridges and boulder clay.

I have seen grooved and striated rocks near the top of the South Side Hill and in the interior of the country near the Topsails. The climax of the frigid era has long since passed, and we of to-day are seeing the re-advance of a milder state, which in its turn must give place to another glaciation. Thus the great cycle of change keeps on, with no trace of beginning nothing to indicate an end.

The coal bearing strata of Bylot contain a great number of thin, scattered, inter-bedded, with sandstone and shale. They begin about 1200 feet above the sea and terminate at an elevation of about 1400 feet. The thickest seam observed is about 18 inches in depth.

Below the coal bearing strata, one may see thin dykes of intrusive rock of the acid type, resembling trachyte ramifying in many directions through the dark shales. Those shales also contain nodular concretions of limestone and pyrite. The limestone is
