The New Order.

To-day we are told at last the detailed composition of the new British Cabinet and at the same time, from a source that should be well informed, the programme it has set itself to carry out. Neither belies the expectation of a revolution, for Britain is likely to find itself immediately the victim, albeit a willing one, of such shaking up as has not for many years disturbed its placid composure. It is abundantly evident that the new leader takes a wide view of the nation's needs and has a very business-like knowledge of the ways and means of meeting them. Press comment seems to show that the personnel of the new Government is very much according to general anticipation. If that is so, the identification of Mr. Lloyd George with the views and policy of his one-time enemies is remarkably indicated, for the list of Ministers reminds one strongly of the old Conservative days of ten or more years ago. Yet even so there is no chance of anything like party government and no fear seems to be felt of it. There is not much need for comment beyond what the messages contain. All the important posts are filled by men of experience and energy. The appointment of Sir Edward Carson to control of the Admiralty is naturally criticised, but there need hardly be misgivings, nor on account of Mr. Balfour, whom he supersedes, and whose abilities would seem to be better suited to the duties of the foreign office. Bonar Law as the new Chancellor and Lord Derby as Minister for War are the right men in the right place. True, Winston Churchill is omitted and a sense of completeness thus lacking, but it is probably felt that ministerial duties would seriously interfere with his important work of writing for the Sunday papers. The importance attached to the "business" offices cannot pass notice and it is emphasised by much of the programme that is outlined. Control of shipping, of agriculture, of the liquor trade (too long delayed) and of food, all in the interests of the state, is itself an ambitious undertaking. But this and every important form of activity the new Government promises to manifest are to be made subservient to the one great purpose of carrying on the war, and carrying it on with the economy and utilisation of every material atom of strength and resource the nation and the Empire possess. It is the clear sense of this that wins for it the support of every class and nearly every individual. Formidable already, Britain bids fair next year to be a giant ever among her mighty war compeers. Lloyd George and his colleagues may well achieve a greatness unknown to their predecessors and the title of the Government that finished the war.

GREECE.

No one at this hour will take seriously the report from Athens that King Constantine has once more become tractable and kindly disposed towards the Entente. The time is too late for it, even if it be true. The King may make many offers—he has made them in the past—but he is clearly only temporising if he can, until the time has come, as arranged with Germany, for him to cast off all disguise. The events of last week are proof that the Allies will have no more of an impossible situation. Evidently they have permitted it thus far, not out of consideration for this contemptible figure, but in the hope of winning to their side by peaceable means a united ally. It is time to give over the attempt. The threat to the army, particularly that part of it at Monastir, is too great longer to be ignored. That Greece in attacking our forces from the rear would be committing suicide would be no consolation to us for the damage she could do; and she is quite capable of suicide. Delay is most dangerous. Now, while Germany is busy with Roumania, is the time to act. If we must meet Greece as an enemy we should meet her now, not when a greater foe besets us on the other side. The forecast printed by the Sun may be a little fanciful, but we shall not have long to wait for proof. The blockade in force now by force; it will be surprising if this week does not see Greece caught in the toils of war, with the horrors of civil strife ensuing. Such a price must be a country pay that permits its destiny to lie in the hands of a weak-minded puppet.

Lucky, Perhaps, He Was Arrested.

A mariner belonging to the Old Country was found in a helpless state on Water Street on Saturday night and brought to the Police Station for his own safety and the security of his money, of which he had something like $200 in his pockets. It was well for himself that some of the light-fingered gentry did not run across him. While in custody the mariner recounted to the police yesterday after he had sobered up, a story of the thrilling experience he and his family had in England last year. His home was demolished by a bomb, which was hurled at the innocents by an infamous German aircraft, but, fortunately, no one was injured seriously.

Rod and Gun.

Rod and Gun for December is replete with good things for its sportsmen readers. Among the stories and articles that may be specially mentioned are: "Hunting" the Webfoot among the icefields," by Bonnycastle Dale, the well-known Canadian naturalist and writer of outdoor life; "Trails That Cross in The Snow," another nature story by H. C. Haddon, who always writes entertainingly and convincingly of the creatures of the wild; "A Mountain for The Hunt" by Paul A. W. Wallace, a humorous sketch of the obstacles encountered and overcome by a young husband who undertook to secure for his capricious better half a picture of an almost inaccessible mountain. "Nipigon Lake and River" is a "been there" account of a fishing trip to this famous resort. "King of the Big Swamp," by F. V. Williams explains the cover cut for December. The regular departments devoted to Fishing, Guns and Ammunition, the Trap, the Traps, Conservation, the Kennel, are all well maintained. W. J. Taylor, Limited, Woodstock, Ont., are the publishers of this premier Canadian sportsman's magazine.

AT THE CRESCENT.

The Crescent Picture Palace presents a three reel Broadway star feature to-day: "The Inner Glow" is a great social drama featuring Mary Maurice, Chas. Kent and Gordon Gray. "The Girl Across the Way," is a Biograph melodrama. Burns and Stull as Pokes and Jabs, are featured in "The Land Lubbers," a side-splitting Vim Comedy. Professor McCarthy playing the newest and best music; don't miss seeing this big week opening show.
