Ministers of State.

"I know me. I hold a warrant for your arrest."

They were the words used by Detective Inspector Bedford, as he him- self said at Westminster Police Court, when he called upon Marie Charles, "the Madame Charles," who was charged with fortune-telling.

Marie lives in "Brompton-road," Mr. Bedford said that on the way to the station she said, "Why don't you arrest the people who come to me Ministers of State and the highest Ministers of State? They persecute me to do what I don't ask them to come."

When he called, said Mr. Bedford, he saw Mme. Charles in an armchair. A other. On a small table between them were playing cards, apparently just cut.

Madame became very agitated, and the officer, whose name and address were taken, remarked, "Madame is a friend of mine. I have just dropped in to see her. I am going to the front to-morrow. She had just cut the cards, but I don't know what she was going to tell me. I paid her no money."

Searching the premises, Mr. Bedford took possession of cards, two black cushions, and a crystal ball. "I never use it. You had my other one," said Madame, referring to the crystal.

A remand was ordered, bail being allowed.—London Times.

It is never necessary to grease a pie tin. Pastry properly made will grease its own tin.

Nothing will make up for the absence of milk in a diet designed to promote good health.

Smoke Money.

The secretary of a well known city firm advertised for an office boy. A youth aged about twelve or thirteen called in person, and asked what the wages would be. Four dollars a week he was told. He turned up his nose and walked out of the building, remarking, "Why that wouldn't keep me in fags!"

Toronto Centennial.

One hundred years of Methodism in Toronto, was celebrated by a great mass meeting in the Metropolitan Church on the evening of Nov. 20th. The mind of the audience was carried back over the years by Rev. Dr. W. H. Hincks in a series of "flashlight" sketches of early days and the pioneer preachers and laymen of Methodism. Then by a swift turn the audience was transported into the future in an address by Bishop McDowell of Washington, in which he spoke of what the world would be when the years had flown away and the spirit and principles of the Nazarene prevailed in the lives of men.—The Wesleyan.

Not in Ecclesiastes.

The quotation suggested by Rudyard Kipling for the inscription on the great war stone does not appear in Ecclesiastes, nor does the word "achieve" appear anywhere in a similar statement. In Ecclesiastes, (in the Apocrypha) Chapter 44 and verse 14 is the following, "Their bodies are buried in peace; but their name liveth evermore." We presume this is the statement to which he refers but it is not at the close of the tribute to "Famous Men." The tribute to famous men continues through four or five chapters, following the 44th and is very interesting reading.—The Wesleyan.

The Appetites of the Insane.

London, Dec. 2.—An out-of-the-way aspect of food rationing was referred to the annual meeting of the North Wales Asylum by Dr. Frank Jones, the medical superintendent, who said that while the patients up to the present were receiving ample rations, it should not be forgotten that the chronic insane were ravenous eaters. Forgetting almost everything else, they did not forget to eat, and even to deprive them of certain articles of food, while giving them a sufficiency of others, would certainly tell its tale.

Obituary.

Capt. P. Otterson died at Cadiz on October 13th, word of his death having been brought here by the captain of the schr. David C. Rutledge. Captain Otterson was a Dane, but had been associated with our island shipping for the last forty years. He has captained several of our vessels and has had many thrilling adventures. When the Duchess of Cornwall was sunk he was taken and imprisoned by the Germans, but later released because of his nationality. News of his demise was communicated to Mr. Jones of the Institute.

Paris Missed Tragic Fate.

In his preface to a book just published by M. Cuorriere, "How Paris Was Saved," Gen. Maunoury, the victor of the Aure, who contributed so much to the saving of the capital in 1914, gives the inhabitants a hint as to what they might have expected to find in the city after the memorable successes.

He says Gen. Von Kluck, the German commander, boasted at one of his camps early in September, 1914, that Paris would be given over to the fury and vandalism of his soldiers as soon as he entered the city.

The sacking of Paris by the Germans leaves little to be imagined, and were it not for the victory of those brave men, many of whom no longer live, the capital may have resembled to-day a smoking mass of debris and ashes—a Pompeii in ruins.

He Caught His Train.

Besides being a magnificent soldier, Gen. Botha has a pretty wit. On toward the end of the Boer War, during a colloquy between Botha and Kitchener about armistice terms, Botha rose to go, when Kitchener said: "Don't hurry. You've got no train to catch." "That's just what I have," Botha answered, and hustled off. Kitchener heard next day that Botha had carried out a raid that night, and captured a British armored train on the Delagoa line.

ARM AMPUTATED.—The young man Bulger, who had his arm shattered by the accidental explosion of a gun, came in by train yesterday from Trepassey and was sent to Hospital. His arm will probably be amputated.

Our Deathless Infantry.

(By Sidney Howard, in Daily Mail.)

We were told that this was a "war of machinery," an "airman's war," a "tank war," and a "war of artillery," but the infantryman has won it. Flesh and blood have conquered machinery; man has proved mightier than his weapons. The axiom of Napoleon's General Morand, "L'infanterie c'est l'armée" has again been vindicated. The Lee-Enfield of the British soldier has proved as deadly as the long bow his forebears wielded at Crecy, marksmanship as effective as that of his great-grandfather at Waterloo.

The infantry is the queen of our arms. The airman battling in the clouds is superb, the gunner slamming shells into the reeking gun-breath is magnificent; the tank man voyages into Hunland in his death-spitting travelling fort, the supply services bring up their convoys to the very tick of time no matter how hellish the shell-fire; but it is to the man in the trench that the palm of victory must be given.

From those dark days when with bleeding feet he limped from Mons his spirit has been indomitable. He has never failed the Empire. His courage has transfigured that theatre of the politicians' folly, Gallipoli, into a shrine of Fame. The bones of many bleached in the desert sun, the bodies of others rot in the mire of the Salient, but, as they tell, their comrades caught and held aloft the flaming torch of their unquenchable valour.

In the beginning we lacked aeroplanes, machine guns, and artillery, but we were not deficient in heroes. When the Germans descended in overwhelming hordes the infantry stood firm and slew them until the swamps of Flanders stank with their corpses. The Boche made hand-grenades and tossed them into the British trenches, but the infantry caught them and tossed them sizzling back to burst and blow the luckless throwers to pieces.

There were bad days when the Hun swamped the trenches with his Devil's gas, but the British soldier clapped wet rags upon his mouth and nostrils and killed his man before he rolled back frothing blood.

The infantry waited while an unready Empire forged its weapons. The time came and they rose from the trenches and stormed by frontal attack the greatest fortifications that man has ever made. They paid a heavy price, but they broke the field-grey's moral.

The tide of battle has ebbed and flowed, but in triumph and adversity the British soldier has never lost his head. He has fought in trenches and without them; he has endured tortures more excruciating than ever Torquemada devised; he has fought parched with thirst and with limbs rotting from frostbite. He has suffered an iron discipline without complaint; he has been the worst paid of any branch of the Service, his casualties the most grievous.

But he has endured and won.
