

TO ONE IN PARADISE.
Thou wast that all to me, love,
For which my soul did pine,
A green isle in the sea, love,
A fountain and a shrine,
All wreathed in fairy fruits and flowers—
And all the flowers were mine.
Ah, dream too bright to last!
Ah, starry Hope that didst arise
But to be overcast!
A voice from out the Future cries,
"On, on!" but o'er the Past,
(Dim gulf, my spirit hovering lies
Mute, motionless, aghast.
For alas, alas! with me
The light of life is o'er!
"No more—no more—no more—"
(Such language holds the solemn sea
To the sands upon the shore)
Shall bloom the thorn's blest tree,
Or the stricken eagle soar?
And all my days are trances,
And all my nightingales
Are where thy dark eye glances—
And where thy footstep gleams—
In what ethereal dances,
By what eternal streams.

CHAPTER XXXVI.—JIM MURDOCHSON BARKLED AT LAST—THE STRATH ONCE MORE—PREPARATIONS FOR THE WEDDING.
"Who says I have committed crimes?" said Jim, with a bluster.
"I say so. You could not have got my passenger's cheque without a crime."
"Pooh, pooh; that is but suspicion, and I'll brave it. Now, then, Mr. Munro, be good enough to write out the papers again. As for you, Captain Mungall, I defy you and all you can do."
"Miserable wretch, your boasting is at an end," said the captain; and as he spoke the door opened, and William, Robert, Waty, and Ben slowly entered the room.
Jim Murdochson's eyes nearly leapt from their sockets. George Munro and Mary sprang to their feet in glad surprise, but he sank back in his chair in speechless horror.
"So, villain, you find yourself baffled at last," said William, addressing him in the sternest of accents. "Your career of crime and wrong has been a long one, but it has reached its termination. Robber, pirate, murderer, the gallows awaits you."
Bree, who stood by William's side, no sooner caught sight of Jim than he growled angrily, and would have sprung upon him if a word from his master had not prevented him. He stood over against him, however, with flashing eyes and uncovered teeth, betraying most unmistakably his feelings of animosity.
"The game is up with me, without a doubt," said Jim, trying to recover his natural effrontery. "But though 'tis lost, I save some of the stake. You'll not go against me, for Munro's sake."
"Your usual suteness has shown you where your safety lies," rejoined Denman. "For the sake of our estimable friends here, we consent to keep silent, so long as you give them no annoyance. But dare to utter a word to their disparagement, and the hangman's halberd will be your doom. Now, go, and rid them and us for ever of your vile presence."
"Crestfallen, abject, and utterly discomfited, Jim rose from his seat and glided towards the door. Before he reached it, Robert, Douglas intercepted him.
"I'll trouble you to deliver up a cheque of mine which you have about you," was his simple demand. Without a moment's hesitation, though with an unsteady hand, Jim drew forth a greasy pocketbook, and producing the cheque handed it to its rightful owner, who, on receiving it, turned curtsy on his heel, and left Murdochson free to go. On the threshold he was again intercepted, and this time by George Munro.
"To remove you above the temptation of crime," he said, "and in the hope that you may reform your life, I undertake to give you eighty pounds a year. But the conditions are that you reside far from this, and never attempt to see either Mary or me."
"I accept your offer," muttered Jim, and slunk away like a guilty thing.
A bright July morning shone over land and sea as William Denman and Robert Douglas stood silently together on the height which overlooked the Strath. The two friends were alone—the Captain, Ben and Waty having resolved to proceed to the Strath by the highway, while the two youths crossed the hills by the bridge path. They had traversed the solitary road in almost perfect silence; even Bree, who accompanied them, walked along in a very sober and subdued manner close at their heels. Robert yearned to say something soothing and cheering to William; but, alas! he could find no words of comfort or of hope to utter. During the course of their silent walk, Robert had again and again stolen a glance at William's rigid face of woe, wishing that words of some kind might be spoken between them, but William seemed altogether unconscious of his presence, as if he had shut himself up in the far recesses of his grief-stricken soul.
On the brow of the eminence where the Strath burst upon their view, they stood motionless, and gazed upon the scene. It was lovely as ever, and so unchanged that William Denman could almost fancy that the intervening year was but one long dream; that it was still the day when first he stood on that height, that he had never quitted it, but that all that had since come and gone was a flight of fancy. But this idea lasted only for a moment, and then, while his sorrowful eye wandered slowly over the prospect, he continued to pursue the train of bitter reflection which had occupied him since he and Robert left the head. He was glad now that he had not discovered himself to any one. Often, in hours of peril and danger, he had been on the eve of divulging his secret to Robert Douglas—discovering to him the fact that William Denman was not his rightful appellant, but that he was Conrad Mowbray, the proprietor of the Abbey. He was glad now that this had been so; for since he must quit the Strath forever, it was better far that no one should know him in his true personality. He had resolved that even Jacob M'Quirk should not know that the youth he had so rudely insulted was his master, for though he would take care that he was immediately discharged from the office he had so foully abused, the change would be made through his law agent in Edinburgh, with whom alone he had hitherto transacted all business matters; and thus Jacob would never know the direct reason of his downfall.
Suddenly, as thus they stood in silence on the height, a sound reached them from below, which caused both to start, while a spasm of pain passed over William's face, so pale and sad. It was the church bell sending forth a merry peal, contributing its quota to the general rejoicing on the Baronet's marriage day.
"There sounds my death-knell," said William with a groan.
"My brother, my brother: how my heart grieves for you," murmured Robert in tender tones. "Would to God I could relieve your sorrow, or share it with you."
"Alas, you cannot," returned William, "I must bear it alone. Had I but been prepared; but the blow was so unlooked for, and my hopes so high and so assured. Well, well, the blow has fallen, and I must call up my manhood to bear it. One other look at the bonny Strath—one long farewell look, and then we shall go." Slowly and sadly William's eye swept the magnificent prospect. Then with a long sigh he dashed down the slope, waving with his hand for Robert to follow.

HARBOR OF REFUGE.—The Huron Signal says:—"C. J. Brydges, Esq., with several other prominent railway men visited our town (Goderich) a few days ago. They were met at the station by a number of our principal citizens. All were at liberty to state relative to the harbour is that it is now certain to be assumed by the government as a harbour of refuge, and that this year a channel will be cut through the sandbank on the north side so as to allow the water to enter the lake from that point. This policy is one which we have repeatedly advocated."

THERE IS NO PLACE in the DOMINION WHERE DRY GOODS can be purchased on such favorable terms as in Guelph at WILLIAM STEWART'S. This fact is now universally admitted. Many families buy or order from Guelph, as they find Dry Goods of a superior class, and remarkable for cheapness. When such is the case, it is astonishing that any who can pay ready cash continue to buy from the surrounding villages an inferior class of goods at high prices, when coming to Guelph they might have the best goods at the lowest price, therefore
