A pleasing land of drowsy-head it was, Of dreams that wave before the half-shut eye.
And of gay eastles in the clouds that pass, Forever flushing round a summer sky.
The above lines from "The Castle of Indelence" aptly describe a little summer resort on the north shore of Lake Erie which, although until recently comparatively unknown outside of the Canadian cities in its immediate vicinity, has lately taken on a decided boom and is destined to be heard from in the future. As you approach the harbor of Port Stanley, Ont. you wonder where the town is. Situated at a point of Lake Erie where the land recedes perceptibly from the general contour of the Canadian shore, thus forming a sort of bay, the village nestles picturesquely among a number of high hills, which are apt to lead one to believe that the inhabiants are not at home, until the boat is fairly within the jaws of the harbor. Then you discover that although the folks may be at home they are not making much noise about it.

you discover that although the folks may be at home they are not making much noise about it.

Although the town is more than half a century old, it has not been very prosperous in a business way, and at the present time does not contain a permanent population of more than 500 people. Old tumble-down warehouses, crumbling spiles and a general air of dilapidation along the dock speak of the once thriving lake trade which the port enjoyed. Fifteen years ago, say the old sailor residents, Port Stanley was as lively a little port as there was along the chain of lakes, and it was no uncommon thing to see 20 or 30 craft of all descriptions in the harbor at one time. Times were good for sailors those days and large quantities of coal were freighted across the lake from Cleveland and taken to London and other places on the cars. But times have changed, and now there are not 50 vessels, all told, seen in the harbor all season. Those that do come in are looking for shelter from the severe storms and sudden squalls which frequently rage on Lake Eric. The Canadian Government has neglected the dredging of the harbor and the water has become so shallow that it is now unsafe for a deeply laden vessel to enter the mouth of the piers in a heavy test.

tunlike the latter, are densely covered ith the stately pines and sturdy oaks of e forest, whose thick foliage bends and ays majestically under the influence of e summer winds.

There are hills to the east, hills to the There are mins to the east, mins to the west and hills to the north, but the premier hill of all is that known as Fraser Height, situated on the west side of the harbor. Over twenty years ago the Grand Trunk Railroad, then known as the Grand now known as the Fraser hill, and Wm. Erser, the present proprietor of the Fraser, the present proprietor of the Fraser House, sub-leased the hill and after rchased a considerable tract of land pon which he built a commodious summer otel and laid out grounds remarkable for neir natural beauty. Independent of the totel is a large dining hall for the accom-todation of picnickers, and on the grounds modation of pienickers, and on the grounds are dance houses, merry-go-rounds, swings, etc. The hill is 150 feet above a wide stretch of sandy beach, and the bank in some places is so steep and the overhanging binff so precipitate that it would seem like inviting instant death for a person to attempt the descent. In other places, however, the bank is on more of an incline, and the ascont from the beach below is made comparatively easy by flights of stairs placed at convenient points. On picnic days an elevated tramway is run from the beach to the hill. The tramway connects with the elegant little passenger steamer mathead of the Joe Militon, and as the steamer moved out into the lake, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," was sung by several lasty young voices.

PORT STANLEY'S HAINTED CAVE.

An article on this little summer resort would not be complete without mention of the haunted cave. Yes, do not be incredulous, for Port Stanley has a real haunted cave. Yes, do not be incredulous, for Port Stanley has a real haunted cave. Yes, do not be incredulous, for Port Stanley has a real haunted cave. Whisper! Away back in the dim and misty past, tradition has it hat a band of snugglers did a flourishing traffic between the American and Canadian shores. They had two or three schooners that were as swift as the wind, and they remained undiscovered for a long time. An honest fisherman named James Payne was the same of the final without the ented as having a torner, and one wild and awful night Payne was murdered in cold blood and his body hid in the smuglers' cave. Although the fisherman of the final transmit of the final was missed, it was a long time before his at the same of the final transmit of the fi basch to the hill. The transway connects with the elegant little passenger steamer Joe Milton, which runs hourly excursions out into the lake.

A GALLANT CAPTAIN AND A HUSTLING ONE. Capt. John Ellison, whose personality is best described by asying that he is as a red, round and rosy as a harvest apple, controls the steamer and the inclined railroad. He is also engaged in an extensive fishing business, which industry is remarkably burnative in those waters. Probable—Speculations as to His Successor.

Montreal, Sept. 7.—The Monde tonight says Sir John Abbott will resign the Premiership at the end of the month.

Ottawa, Ont. Sept. 7.—Everybody who takes any interest in politics at the Capital is at present they Cabinet making. It is generally conceded by all that Premier Abbott will retire at an early day. As to his successor, Sir John Thompson is still generally named as the coming man. A few probably favor Sir Chas. Tupper, and the name of Hon. John Haggart has been put forward. Sir Chas. Tupper, it is said, would not accept if offered it, and Mr. Haggart, it is well known, would not be an aspirant with Sir John Thompson in the field. Premier Abbott is also said to favor the Minister of Justice, and he has the privilege of submitting the name of his proposed successor, although Lord Stanley is not obliged to send for the man so nominated. This, it will be seen, removes nearly apparent obstacles from Sir John Thompson becoming First Minister of the Dominion.

A GREAT PLACE FOR EXCURSIONISTS.
The bathing facilities at POrt Stanley are unexcelled. A nice sandy bottom, combined with the pleasure of being able to wade into the lake for several hundred feet, attracts the multitude, regardless of sex or age, and the more turbulent the waves the greater the sport. And the stories of the great catches made by amateur fishermen would put to blush the fairy tales of Munchausen. Boating is also a favorite pastime, both lake and river being well patronized. When large excursions visit the town myriads of small craft of all kinds may be seen flitting hither and thither—provided the water is calm.

A great number of excursions are run to Port Stanley during the summer, the people coming mainly from the neighboring cities and towns. The London and Port Stanley division of the Grand Trunk road runs three trains daily, and as London is only 22 miles distant the village is the summer residence of a great many families of London's upper ten. Several picturesque little cottages have been erected, and the surroundings of some of them are calculated to inspire sentimental feelings in the breasts of the most prosy. Several of the cottagers have baptized their dwellings, and such signs as Erie Cabin, Glen Erie Lodge, Idle wild, Broadview and Willow Cottage are common.

The details of the indent were not related in the dispatch. It ppears that a neighboring narty of London unpers became incensed at the sight of an incoent little flag of the Stars and Stripes attern and at dead of night, when the oungstown boys were peacefully dreaming ne loyalists sneaked up and tore down the az. The townspeople were just as indigant over the insult as were the Youngstown ampers, and resented theaction of the brave oung men from London by presenting the mericans with a brand new flag. When he boys left Port Stanley for Cleveland that new Stars and Stripes flew from the bast-head of the Joe Milton, and as the teamer moved out into the lake, "Columia, the Gem of the Ocean," was sung by everal lusty young voices.

She is a relative of Proprietor Fraser, and her charities in the village are well known. Mr. Fraser's two daughters, one of whom is happily married to Manager Honeysett, are an attraction in themselves, and the proprietor may well feel proud of the increasing popularity of Port Stanley as a summer resort. A 'bus, which resembles nothing so much as Detroit's open patrol wagons, conveys passengers to and fro between the Fraser House and the quaint little depot in the village. The driver of the vehicle, Martin Fraser, is a sturdy Scotchman of the old school, and well understands the business of guiding the horses up and down the terribly steep roadway that leads to the heights.

A summer spent in Port Stanley is like a passing dream, as one day doth tread upon another's heels, so fast they follow. Stand upon the hill on the afternoon of a midsummer day. Beneath and before you stretch the sheeted waters of old Eric, which has gathered to its treacherous bosom many an ill-fated sailor and vessel. Away off on the distant horizon you may discern the shimmering sail of a schooner. She is bowing merrily along under a moderate breeze, but in less than an hour's time she may be soudding for shelter, with searcely a stitch of canvas on. A beautiful panorama of white, blue and green greets the eye, and as you "list to the wild waves as they beat on the shore," a pleasing sense of rest comes over the senses, and you are almost lulled into a state of sweet repose. Rouse yourself and look north of you. A succession of hills and dales, fields of waving corn and wheat, and gently undulating lands, the whole perlumed with the scent of sweet clover and bright flowers, tell of as fine a farming district as there is in the country.

PORT STANLEY AS A SUMMER RESORT.

Port Stanley possesses all the natural advantages of a first-class summer resort and is becoming more and more popular as the years roll by. Its situation among the hills and the baimy quiet which usually reigns throughout the village suggests the name of Peacetul Valley as a more appropriate one for the town. The river becomes a winding stream as it flows northward toward St. Thomas, nine miles distant, and at that place it is almost a bubble. The hill which surround the village are almost as high as the Black Hills of South Dakota, but unlike the latter, are densely covered with the stately nines and study oaks of
