Canada Has Acted as a Free Nation, But Will Not Attempt to Boss Britain.

A contemporary accuses Canadians of exhibiting a stupid indifference to the establishment of preferential trade between the Dominion and Great Britain, and it argues that we should now all be engaged in agitation with that object in view.

The accusation here formulated is found in a number of Opposition journals, and the set purpose appears to be to make-believe that Canada is to be the agency that will compel the British people to change their trade examine the first count in Canada Upheld in Britain. Sir Donald Smith (now Lord Strathna) is doing a great deal for the advancement of Canada's interests in Great Britain. Every week, almost every day, he is saying something in public that has a direct tendency to call attention to the wonderful resources of the Dominion. Under these circumstances, it was natural that our fellow-countryman should argue that a medical license granted in Canada should enable the holder to carry or work anywhere within the Eritish Empire. Surely the time when this justice will be conceded is not far distant. It would supply another illustration of the unity of the British peo-

Whitney's Weak Disclaimer. At a recent meeting in Lindsay, the Post says, Mr. Whitney, the Opposition leader, was very anxious to make it appear that he had nothing to do with "the Tupper crowd," despite the fact that a Tupper organizer managed the gathering and ran the show. The pretense was too transparent.
