Cartwright And Ross

The Liberal Leaders Address a Large Audience.

Minister of Commerce and Premier of Ontario Get a Grand Reception.

Opposition Fallacies Exposed and the Government's Course

Ablly Vindicated—Paramount Objects Presented—The Development of Canada, Permanency of the Tariff and Unity of the Dominion With the Empire—Mr. Ross' Glowing Tribute to Sir Wilfrid's Statesmanship.

The presence in London of two of the ablest parliamentarians that Canada has ever known—men of wide experience in affairs of statesmanship, and famed for their fluent mastery of the arts of debate—would at any time be considered of sufficient moment to attract an immense crowd of citizens; and coming as they did, not for local political purposes, but under the auspices of the Western Ontario Liberal Association, at a time when the government under whose skillful guidance the Dominion has enjoyed such exceptional prosperity is about to go to the people for further indorsement, it is little to be wondered at that despite the counteracting influence of disagreeable weather the meeting was so well attended by serious-thinking citizens, among whom, naturally, enthusiastic supporters of the Liberal policy were most numerous.

It would be difficult to determine which of these two men produced the more favorable impression upon the audience—Sir Richard Cartwright, Minister of Trade and Commerce, a debater so caustic, so scathing in his attacks upon the weak points of an adversary's arguments, with a powerful, all-embracing grasp of the large affairs and small details of public life, standing as the representative of the young and wonderful successful Dominion Government; or Hon. George W. Ross, the leader of the firmly-established Ontario Government, a magnetic and fluent speaker, a statesman of admirable and versatile accomplishments. Their words concerning the work and aims of the Canadian government were listened to, for the most part, with thoughtful attention by the audience, although at times, when some particularly noteworthy achievement or purpose was mentioned, the calm was broken by tumultuous applause. As the palpable sophistries of members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition were shivered into reasonless atoms by the attacks of Sir Richard and his talented associate, neither of whom is tender in his treatment of antagonists, the speakers were applauded again and again.

In dealing with Dominion affairs the speakers mentioned were assisted by Mr. John Fraser, M. P. for East Lambton, and Dr. MacDonald, M. P. for East Huron, president of the association under whose auspices the meeting was held, who also presided. It was intended that Mr. W. S. Calvert, the brilliant member for West Middlesex, should also make an address, but after pleasure was deferred until a future occasion because of the lateness of the hour.
