

Mrs. H. VON RODEN of LYNDON, KY.

Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for Backache, Nervousness, Headaches.

Lyndon, Ky. - "I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for headaches, neuralgia pains, backache, nervousness and a general run down condition of the system, and am entirely relieved of these troubles. I recommend your remedies to my friends and give you permission to publish what I write." Mrs. H. VON RODEN, Lyndon, Ky.

When a woman like Mrs. Von Roden is generous enough to write such a lettar as the above for publication, she should at least be given credit for a sincere desire to help other suffering women, for we assure you there is no other reason why she should court such publicity.

There was a strong streak of Scotch in Rossile. From the race of warlocks and dreamers on the edge of the infinite had she got her taste and talent for mysticism, her genuine clairvoyance—whatever that may be. From it had she taken her that may be. From it had she taken her love for mystery, her deep hidden leaning toward romance. From it, finally, had she taken a conscience which, like a tree wind-planted in the cleft of a rock, grew and matured to bear fruit in spite of an adverse environment. In these forties, conscience mastered her. She could no longer traffic with grief to the shame of her own heart. In her revelation to Martin McGee she had concealed one fact, as it was her habit to conceal the very springs and sources of her actions. It springs and sources of her actions. It was that she had left the business of professional mediumship, when a turn in professional mediumsnip, when a turn in her romantic life brought fortune, for conscience and conscience alone. The hidden excitement and romance of the profession, the contact with other and strange minds, the opportunity for busy-bodying, for guiding destinles—all these appealed. But she could no longer en-dure the treacheries and sacrileges of her own method.

Here, now, when she had thought to put it all behind her, she was embarked on the most treacherous adventure of all. She was playing with human affection, not for the ultimate comfort and consolation of the dupe, but for an end which she of the dupe, but for an end which she dreaded to think on. She had fought that out, it is true, on the afternoon when she heard through the half-open door Constance's appeal to Betsy-Barbara. She faltered no more—except in her lonely communings with herself—but her very distaste for the work drove her to hasten it, as one drinks a noxious draught at a single mouthful. Under the pretense that her obsession was driving her, that she her obsession was driving her, that she had bottled it up too long that "it just had to come out of her," Rosaiie Le Grange multiplied the seances with Miss Estrilla to the point of danger and in-

On the second day after the session in which Miss Estrilla had tried the test of the fictitious revolver, she was back again. This time—having assurance that this was the true line of attack—she brought both Victoria and Miguel. Victoria, according to Doctor Carver, was the stronger; she spoke much, though vaguely. Miguel dropped only a few phrases, now Spanish, now English, During this session. Miss Estrilla never move ing this session, Miss Estrilla never moved nor spoke. But Rosalie, daring a look at her through her long lashes, perceived that her attitude was tense, rapt. In such long preliminary passages with a difficult sitter, Rosalie's experience had course is as easy as lying. The dupe, once the defences are broken, is eager to believe. Where before the skeptical mind turned every new irregular fact to the dis-advantage of the medium, now the eager mind turns every fact to her advantage. "Every sheet's a ghost," Rosalie had remarked time and again. "Hardest thing ble Compound. I am lis to hold 'em back. There's nothing they can't swallow." In this, her third seance, Rosalle was proceeding as cautiously as an elephant on a bridge weiting for the and can do my own first and vital question.

Were drowned in the women's shrieks
At last, when all who were able had It came at the fourth sitting.

By this time Rosalie had begun to re-1stens and floor of the gallery celve cable reports from Port of Spain. The detective, it appeared, was a police-man of singular fidelity or of singular acumen. Taking literally the order about "little details," he had filed one of the most curious dispatches in the annals of the New York police department. It concerning Miss Estrilla's relations with her father. Their rides together when she was a little girl, and the family was con-spicuous on the island, the circumstance of an accident to one of the horses, even names and small coin of domesti intercourse—all this he set forth fully Beyond doubt he had found the "ok family servant" mentioned in the teleram of instruction, and milked him dry, So at this fourth seance Rosalle brought not Miguel—that were too great a strain on her Spanish—but Victoria, ntroduced her, as usual, with vague sen-ences, growing always more definite, and crystallizing finally into the vital, starting fact. Rosalie was speaking freely now, her pose that of a dead trance. "Do you remember," she asked, "the time they carried you home, as though ou were dead, from the stable, and you revived and spoke to me when they brought you in the door? Do you remember—Margy, dear?" The telegram from Detective Hawley had informed Rosalie that the baptismal name of Miss Estrilla—or Miss Perez—was Margarita, and that her mother used the name in its English er mother used the name in its English form and her father in Spanish.

"Do you remember, Margy, dear?" repeated the voice of the "spirit" through the entranced lips of Rosalie Le Grange.

"Yes." said Miss Estrilla, so suddenly that it nearly shook Rosalie out of her trance. "I remember, mother, dear, What was his name—that horse?" was his name—that horse?"

"Still a little skeptical; but it's the last gasp. I'll fix her right-now. Lucky I've got it!" said the mind of Rosalie Le Grange working rapidly behind her mask.
"We had Billy, and—but it wasn't he—
It was that black horse Vixen which you would ride against my wishes!" said the voice. Rosalie heard Miss Estrilla heave a long sigh; heard her settle herself against the pillows as though quite overorn with emotion.

But Rosalie did not proceed directly along the road of treacheries which she was travelling. Victoria went away with the capricious suddenness of all Rosalie's spirit friends. The voice of Laughing-Eyes, the child control, burst in. Upon Miss, Estrilla, Rosalie used Laughing-Eyes, sparingly. With an ignorant and over-impressionable sitter she was an invaluable feature, this Laughing-Eyes. To person of greater discernment, the child mpersonation was likely to be ridiculous. Rosalie usually employed her, therefore, only to fill in the chinks, to occupy the time while she was thinking. For Rosalie, after thirty years of experience, produced Laughing-Eyes with her left hand, so to speak. The child patter came by instinct; it required no effort of the conclous will; her mind was free to think Laughing-Eyes into her web.

"Lady is gone!" said Laughing-Eyes.

"Pretty lady! Another spirit—oh—I see things! They shine—oh—go away back! No, he will not stay," and she paused here. And now Miss Estrilla spoke again, and n such a tone that Rosalle knew she "Can't you bring him back, Laughing-Eyes?" she said. "Oh, please bring him back. Tell him, oh, tell him that I am not angry!" A dry sob shook the stience

He is afraid. And he is weak in spirit!" babbled Laughing-Eyes. "Maybe covered when it is kept constantly at he will come again--maybe!" And Laughing-Eyes giggled and babbled of Miguel Mrs. Martin 13 Carroll street Toand Victoria and a dozen spirits imper-tinent to Miss Estrilla. Yet always in her babblings she seemed to hold the atmosphere of truth: she referred casually and in remote ways to a dozen facts about Miss Estrilla's family and her past. Presently her voice died away, and Rosalie lay silent and impassive, waiting for Miss Estrilla to wake her.

John Talke. In the following seance, held the next afternoon at the special and plaintive request of Miss Estrilia, Rosalie Le Grange reached at last the very kernel of the

ska. With arts all her own, Rosalie broke through the reserves of that distressed widow. From discussion of the murder, Widow. From that she lured Constance into deeper confidences, which involved the personal peculiarities of the late Captain Hanska, such as his way of speaking, the quality of his voice, and his methods with women. When Rosalie settled down to the fifth seance, she had in her mind a picture of John H. Hanska which was good everythe for any of her purposes good enough for any of her purposes. The preliminaries were over; Laughing-Eyes had gone her babbling way back to the land of spirits, and Doctor Carver held

"A spirit has been trying to communia spirit has been trying to communicate, but he is a new spirit and not yet strong. He says that the lady's sickness is not of the body. It is of the mind. He also is not happy yet. John was his name on the flesh-plane—it is hard—we over here must make an effort—it is a strain on us as on the medium—I get an 'H'." on us as on the medium—I get an 'H.'' In the ensuing silence Miss Estrilla gave one hard sob.

The silence lasted for half a minute. Rosalie strained and struggled as though a tumult were going on within. Then came a man's voice, higher and softer than that of Doctor Carver.

"I am John, Margaret. I cannot stay long. I am not strong—they tell us over here—that we must forgive—even as we are forgiven. But—I will come again—"

"Oh, John, I am trying to forgive—oh, do you understand—wait—" gasped Miss

Estrilla.

But John spoke no more. To Be Continued.
