THE FISHERMAN'S COT.

It is a very humble little cottage in which this fisherman lives but it is one of the happiest homes in the land, for there joy and peace and love reign supreme. The house stands right down on the seashore, but is snugly protected by some splendid o'ershadowing rocks which protect it from the high winds that often prevail.

Round about the little cottage which is painted a bright shade of yellow stand huge rocks on which the nets are dried. The fisherman's little boy takes keen delight in watching the men wind and unwind these nets, and the fisherman's wife lovingly sees to it that they are kept in good order.
