ed.

ldu-

t to

eted

that

vice

pon

ons

fate

the

itish

still,

cant

and

of

ave

ome

nex-

 \mathbf{not}

թսb-

and ities

Colo-

ated

reat

orth

 \mathbf{nies}

own

such

of a

arow

their

gres-

arge

y.

portion, or even the whole, of the burden of their own defences, is one to which no one could reasonably object, provided that those Colonies were first placed in a position which would enable them to act with vigor and unanimity; otherwise it would impose upon them great hardship, if not injustice. Were they now to be thus thrown upon their own resources, they would be exposed to great dangers. Each Province would naturally measure only its own resources against those of the real or suspected enemy; and the calculation would have a disheartening effect, which would prevent that Province putting forth efforts even to the extent of its own ability. Such force as they could raise collectively would be of comparatively little service; for they would be under no single direction, and in all that related to the raising, equipment, and management of such a force, the various Colonies would, sometimes unintentionally, at other times through local jealousy, or sectional selfishness, be almost incessantly thwaring each other, just as they are now doing, every year, in their legislation upon matters in which they have a common interest. Were the Colonies consolidated under a single Government, they would, there is no reason to doubt, cheerfully accept, as a natural consequence of their being united, the obligation of They would feel too, in that case, protecting themselves. their own real strength, and would not, under any circumstances, shrink despairingly from the duties thus imposed on As a single Commonwealth, they would very soon be in a position to assume the whole charge of their own defence, or to contribute to the defences of the whole Empire to an Great Britain would thus be extent equivalent to that. relieved of a great burden, and British North America would be to her a right arm of strength, instead of, as at present, a cause of weakness.

One inevitable result of the proposed Union would be the immediate connection of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Canada by railroad. The completion of a work which would