Christianity and Morals. Rev. Dr. MacGillivray delivered a scholarly and eloquent sermon at the evening service on the value of the Christian church. It was based on the from Psa'm exvil: "If I forget thee oh Jerusalem.'

Dr. MacGillivray pointed out that the teaching of history everywhere was public, and individual morality would be gauged by the vitality of the religion. This was so in pagan as well as Christian lands. Where religion was despised, morality was sapped. In the case of breaches of trust, such as so frequently shock the community, it was invariably found that the mess concerned have first cast their religion > mass of erring mortals, trying to find their way to some kind of truth." In these words, Rev. J. W. Pedley denounced the idea of the infallibility of the pope, before a crowded congrega-Church last evening.

Mr. Pedley said there never was such a tremendous structure built on so slim a foundation and a church of proud and ambitious ecclesiastics had set up a claim, the like of which had never been made about anything by any-tody. The decrees of the pope were tinding on all Christian people and there was no appeal or discussion, and one must believe them as necessary adjuncts to salvation. The speaker could not understand the mental and moral condition of any man who could accept such a position "I have heard crazy men say carnest ly and solemnly," said the preacher, "that they were God Almighty, but I knew they were crazy, and this is the only case I know of where a man puts forth the claim and people don't think he ought to be in a lunatic asylum." Mr. Pedley found no evidence for apostolic succession and a whole mass of evidence against it.

"The only reason," concluded the preacher, "why we are asked to accept the infallibility of the pope is because a certain number of Italian priests have declared him so. Suppos-ing the Mcthodist Conference at Victoria last summer had decided that they were not up-to-date and thought they must get a move on, and therefore passed a solemn resolution declaring it true, and after he had declared the sciousness to which the man must be Methodist church infallible, it would true.
