For instance, one difference between the government of Great Britain and the government of the United States is this:

The government of Great Britain is really run in the interest of the public, financially and otherwise.

The government of the United States, as everybody knows, is run largely in the interest of big financial concerns, trusts and corporations.

If you doubt this statement, study an arrangement which Great Britain has just completed for sending parcels to the United States thru the postoffice.

All over England parcels are sent thru the postoffice at a nominal rate, much to the advantage of commerce and of private economy. Such an arrangement would exist in this country except for the fact that it would wipe out the enormous profits that come from the extortionate charges of express companies.

The government of Great Britain has just completed an arrangement for extending its parcels post system to the United States. Do you know how it has done that?

It has done it not by any arrangement with the people of the rangement with the people of the United States, the American government or the American postoffice, but by an arrangement with the American Express Company.

CANADIAN EXPANSION.

Editor World: I write to ask you if the time is not ripe for Canada to take active steps towards the complete unification of British America. Our Dominion was formed with that object in view. Coupled with it was the determination of our people to preserve British justice and governmental methods in the western world. Almost every speech favoring the union made during the Confederation debates of 1865 emphasized these points.

Thirty-five years have elapsed and still Newfoundland, which was represented at the Quebec conference, and thus assisted in drafting the Canadian constitution, still lingers cutside. It cannot indeed be said that a perststent effort has since been made to bring her within. I write this to the discredit, if not the shame, of the politicians of both parties. The people of Canada have been a long time in grasping the manifest destiny of their country.

But we must look even farther sea-ward. We must east our vision to the south, where rest tropical isles of America waiting for our invitation to America waiting for our invitation to take shelter under the Maple Leaf. The British West Indies acknowledge the sway of the same sovereign. They should one and all become a part of the Canadian Confederation. A little effort, the exercise of a little sympathy which we undoubtedly feel for the sufferings of our fellow subjects in those isles of the south, and they are ours. Besides, inclusion in our systems. CONSOLIDATE BRITISH AMERICA. tem is necessary for their preservation With pleasure The World prints in to the empire. Just as the continental

The World has advocated this all-British-America 'idea before, and as late as Aug. 19 we urged commercial, as well as sentimental, arguments in support of the proposal.

It is not difficult to deduce reasons why each section of British America would be materially herefited by class South, as well as North.
