

THREE CLASSES ARE PUT TOGETHER UNDER COMPULSION CHANGES

Classes 1, 2 and 3 Will Be Called Simultaneously.

THEN COME MARRIED MEN

Addition to Bill Makes It a Crime to Criticize the Government.

[Special to The Advertiser.] OTTAWA, July 12.—There has been a readjustment of the classes of Canadians to be called for military service. The announcement was made by the solicitor-general just before the House rose at 11 in the morning. Classes one, two and three of the bill are thrown together and made one class. This includes all unmarried men and widowers without children between the ages of 20 and 24. Classes four, five and six are made class two, and includes married men between the ages of 20 and 24. This means that unmarried men and widowers to the age of 24 will be called out together as the first class, and that married men to the age of 24 will be called for service next as the second class. The classes of older men remain with the original separation of years.

Modify Drastic Rule. There was also modification of the provision imposing penalties for the publication of views calculated to interfere with conscription. The prime minister agreed that "maxims" prosecuted for offending by the publication of views. The original declaration of the act was that any person "shall" be prosecuted. Sir Robert Borden said that the enforcement of this provision would be in the same spirit as the censorship had been applied. The government had not taken action in the past and would not take action against publishers in the future unless the offence was flagrant.

Hon. Mr. Oliver said that the application of the press censorship had not inspired confidence. There had been favoritism shown. The government has suppressed a paper at St. Louis, Mo., while another at Montreal, which had offended far more persistently and fearfully, had not been touched. When asked the name of the Montreal paper, he said that it was Le Devoir, published by Henri Bourassa, and the new provisions of the Government.

Consideration of the manner in which tribunals would be formed was first considered. The solicitor-general said that for the selection of local tribunals the board of selection would be formed of members of the House and Senate, and would consist of four from Ontario, four from Quebec and two from each of the other provinces. They might be either members of parliament or members of the Senate. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that as senators and members could only assemble conveniently when Parliament was in session, it might make this clause inoperative. Hon. Mr. Meighen said that he would endeavor to meet the point by a resolution or legislation authorizing members to sit when Parliament was not in session.

Sir Wilfrid thought the selection had best be left in the hands of provincial chief justices. Mr. Meighen said this would be considered, and the clause stands for the purpose.

Just for Judges. The solicitor-general said that the Government had decided to accept the advice of Mr. Graham that there should be more than a money penalty for men who declined, without cause, to act on tribunals. He agreed that the original $500 penalty might permit men to buy themselves off, so it had been decided that the penalty should be imprisonment for two years, without the option of a fine. The minimum imprisonment will be three months. This is regarded as both novel and drastic legislation, as it provides for the imprisonment of judges of the land who fail to respond to the duty designated for them under the bill.

A. K. Maclean thought that the clause declaring that marriages after June 17 would not be recognized by the act should be modified so that it should not affect those that had arranged before that date for marriage. That county court judges should be employed on local tribunals wherever possible was strongly urged by Sir Wilfrid, Messrs. Graham, Pett, A. K. Maclean and others. It was contended that they knew local conditions and were accustomed to arbitration.

An amendment was made to the application of the act to persons in the armed forces, which is designed to prevent the authorities and the person on equal footing before the appeal tribunal.

Religious Exemptions. The clause allowing for exemption on the ground of religious faith was amended so that to determine exemption a person will have to show identification with the religious organization prior to July 26, 1916.

Emanuel Devlin asked if a man could avail himself of belief in the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." Judge Doherty replied that exemption could be obtained only upon definite objection to war by the religious order to which the person belonged. L. A. Lapointe of Montreal said: "Presuming that an attempt will be made to put the bill into force, something that can never be done, it should be named an act to exempt men from military service, or an act for the conscription of liberty."

The proposal by Duncan Ross that appeals from county court judge tribunals should be to higher courts of the same province, was adopted. Judge Mackenzie held that courts should have the right to impose lighter fines than $100 for general contraventions. The $100 minimum was very severe.

Severe and Unreasonable. "This clause is most drastic. It is draconian," said Sir Wilfrid. "I have never seen a more severe, unreasonable, and, at the same time, vague provision in any act. Penalties are all provided in the act for specific offences. To these I have no objection, but here we have a fine of $100 or a jail term for a year, provided for offences which are not even mentioned, let alone defined."

"We have a vague enactment that if any man, in the judgment of someone, has contravened, in some way, the provisions of this act, he will be punished. It is not fair, it is not right, it is not just, I cannot imagine what sort of contravention but already provided for in the act would warrant the imposition of such penalties as are here provided."

Mr. Meighen held that the clause was a proper one, but the minister of justice took the view that the penalties for these offences were lighter than those for the more serious offences. Some discussion of the minimum penalty was reduced from $100 to $10.

Mr. Lapointe was told that the clause would be amended to provide that the minimum penalty would be imprisonment for one month and the maximum would be imprisonment for one year.

Follow English Practice. A. K. Maclean wanted a definition of the exemption on account of "domestic position." In the British House of Commons, Walter Long had stated that this would exempt only the son of a widowed mother who had a brother in the army.

Mr. Meighen thought that the English practice would be followed in Canada.

Mr. Oliver said that the American law provided that each state must furnish its quota of men in proportion to the population of the state of the population of the country. He noted that there was no such provision in the Canadian act.

WHY PEPsin, PANCREATIN, ETC., SO FREQUENTLY FAIL.

An international specialist whose articles on stomach trouble have been printed in nearly every language, recently stated that to treat the average case of stomach trouble, indigestion, dyspepsia, etc., by doctoring the stomach, killing the pain with opiate, or by the use of artificial acids to digestion such as pepsin and pancreatin, was just as foolish and useless as to attempt to put out a fire by throwing water on the smoke, instead of justifying his claim, and facts seem to justify his claim, that nearly nine-tenths of all stomach trouble is due to acidity and food fermentation; and that the only way in which to secure permanent relief is to get rid of the cause, i.e., to neutralize the acid and stop the fermentation. For this purpose he strongly recommends the use of a generally adopted throughout Europe of taking a teaspoonful of ordinary liquid magnesia three or four times a day immediately after eating or when ever pain is felt. This immediately neutralizes the acid, stops the fermentation, and permits the stomach to do its work in a normal manner, and thus by removing the cause, enables nature to quickly restore the inflamed stomach to a perfectly healthy, natural condition. For the convenience of travelers it may be noted that most druggists are now able to supply liquid magnesia in 8-gain tablets, two or three of which will almost instantly relieve the most violent attacks of indigestion.—Adv.
