This was the verdict of Coroner Far-mer's jury, which to-day closed the inquest into the fourfold tragedy of Saturday morning last.

Saturday morning last. Despite this verdict, there still re-mains a doubt in the minds of jurors and of the neighborhood. The whole inquest seems, in the minds of many of the jurors and of the inhabitants, to peror. Four so-called plots mever so peror. Four so-called plots never got beyond this stage. The Rossia, in an inspired article, have been held more for the purpose of dispelling the particular suspicion so broadly hinted at by old Wesley Vansickle, father of Henry, than for in open court. The government has no real discovery. Indeed, one juror told The World desire to hide the facts, it says, and will welcome a full investigation, being determined to prove to the world that an ex-official who has betrayed secrets after the verdict had been signed, that his personal suspicions of foul play had been strengthened, rather than allay-ed by the evidence adduced. Conductor McCallum was brought to the city yesterday by Detectives Wal-lace and Archibaid, a prisoner on his own train. The same details as were wrought at the Toronto end, he arrest-ing Corrigan, were carried out in Mont-real. McCallum took his train, No. 5, leaving the metropolis at 7.30, which was stopped at Coteau Junction, a few miles out of the city, and another con-ductor, under official instructions, brought it the rest of the way. Joseph Woods was arrested by De-tective Tipton in the Montreal depot just after McCallum's train pulled out. The detectives expected him to take the train, but to their surprise, as soon as she started out he bolted and ran for a street car. When overtaken he protested he hadn't been "put wise." There has been a standing warrant out for him in Toronto on a charge of stealing an overcoat.
