

CORRESPONDENCE.

March 29th, 1892.

DEAR MRS. FLETCHER,—I am well and would like to stay here. My mistress is very kind to me, she was nearly sending me back one day in the winter, and I told her I would try and do my work smarter; she said she would let me stay as long as I like, if I was a good girl and learnt my lessons. She has a nice little baby girl, nearly five months' old, she is getting very fat, she got her christened May. Write to

ALICE.

DEAR MRS. FLETCHER,—I now take up my pen in hand to write you a few lines. I suppose Mrs. Bright is at the Home yet, if so, give her my best regards. If you had seen me when I was at the Home you would not know me now, I have grown so fat since I have been here, and I have been very healthy. Well, I have not much more to say this time, it is getting late, and I will have to close for this time. Well, I suppose you would like to know how I am getting along, and how I like my place. I like them real well, they are so good to me, and treat me as good as one of their own. They are good Christian people, there is prayer night and morning, and I go to Sabbath-school every Sunday, and like it very much,

Yours truly,

MAMIE.

P.S.—I would like to receive a letter from you, no more for the present, I'll say good-bye.

April 24th, 1892.

DEAR MRS. BRIGHT,—I am going to try and write you a letter, I began two or three but I never got them fit to send away. My mistress and her daughters are very kind to me, they have made me nice new clothes, I have got five nice new dresses, and a lot of pina-
