Rulers of Europe And Their Palaces

It is rather an interesting fact that only at Moscow and Prague, the capital of Bohemia, are there palaces which resemble Windsor Castle in their age and the traditions connected with them. The Czar, however, only visits Moscow; he does not live there. In and about Petrograd he has several palaces the Winter Palace in the city, Gatchina, Tsarskoye Selo, and others; but Peterhof is 'the favorite.' The history of the old Berlin Schloss, the palace of the Kaiser, is one of continuous building and rebuilding from the days of Elector Frederick II. in the fifteenth century, and though Frederick, the first Prussian king of that name, intended to do away with all he work of his predecessors, his big scheme was not entirely carried out, and some of the old survives. The new palace at Potsdam, however, founded after the close of the Seven Years' War, is the favorite summer residence of the Court, and it was there that Frederick III. died after his brief and ineffectual reign.

The Emperor of Austria is, perhaps, more richly endowed with official residences than any other monarch, except the King of Italy, who seems to have a palace in every city in his kingdom. The important palaces at Vienna are two—the Hofburg, in the heart of the city, and Schronbrunn, in the suburbs.

The Royal Palace in Brussels is a modern building, practical but uninteresting. The Sultan's palace, too, the Dolmabahcheh, is quite modern and uninteresting. It is a long range of buildings, rather like the sea front of a row of houses standing on the river-like shore of the Bosphorus. Internally it is a gaudy palace all bright paint, gilding, stucco, and colored glass. The old palace of the Emperors of Byzantium probably contained some of the most beautiful halls, chambers, and chapels that ever existed in the world, but not one stone of all this building remains—the destruction of wonderful works of antiquity being one of the many curses due to the presence of Turks at Constantinople.—London Tit-Bits.

Why a Shoe Is Thrown After a Bride

Throwing a shoe after the bride is the survival of a custom based upon ancient symbolical usages in connection with sandals or shoes. Delivery of a shoe was used as a testimony in transferring a possession. A man plucked off his shoe and gave it to his neighbor, and this was a testimony in Israel. From these ancient practices came the old English and Scottish customs of throwing an old shoe after a bride on her departure for a new home, symbolizing that the parents gave up all right or dominion over their daughter.

In Anglo-Saxon times the father delivered the bride's shoe, to the bridegroom, who touched her on the head with it to show his authority.
