Some squander time, some invest it, some kill it. That precious half hour a day which many of us throw away, rightly used, would save us from the ignorance which mortifies us, the narrowness and pettiness which always attend exclusive application to our callings.

THE CLOCK IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

It took two years to make, and was designed by Lord Grimthorpe, who also designed the clock for the tower of the House of Commons.

The Pendulum is fifteen feet long—nearly as long as the average dining-room. Think of it! And it weighs seventeen hundredweight. The clock has three faces: they are each seventeen feet in diameter, and the central part—that is the space within the figure ring—is ten feet across. The figures are two feet nine inches—high, that is, as your little brother or sister; or, some of the ladies, of you, as high as your selves! Just fancy! The hands are built of copper, specially to resist wind and snow; the minute hand is nine feet and a half and the hour hand five feet long.

A story is told that St. Paul's clock once struck thirteen at midnight, and so saved a man's life. Let me tell you how it was. The man was named John Hatfield, and he died in the year 1770 at the age of one hundred and two. He says that when he was a soldier in the time of William and Mary he was tried by court-martial on a charge of having fallen asleep when on duty upon the terrace at Windsor-Castle. He denied the charge absolutely, and declared, in proof of his innocence, that he heard St. Paul's clock strike thirteen. He was condemned to death, and while under sentence an affidavit (that is, a sworn testimony) was made by several persons that the clock did strike thirteen on that particular night; and so he was pardoned. Only one thing needs to be corrected in that story, and that is

BENDING THE TWIG.

A six-year-old boy was recently heard to say: "My papa wonned ten dollars at the races t'other day." It was evidently considered an achievement by the lad, and the races had no doubt been spoken of approvingly in his presence.

What a fearful responsibility rests on the parent whose child could refer with pride to his gambling! What may he not expect from his son? Should the latter grow up with the disposition to indulge in the evil of gambling, one of the greatest curses of the age, the thoughtless parent will not be held guiltless. The young child may by his example be led into a course that will wreck his soul and bring the father's gray hairs down to the grave in dishonour.

The twig will grow as it is bent. What a pity so old a truism is not always kept uppermost in the minds of those who have the training of the young in their hands!

ODD FACTS ABOUT TURTLES.

It has been said that the turtle, like the whale, has no other enemy than man, inasmuch as both the little creature and the big pursue their various ways in practical immunity from harm and fear of sudden death.

In many ways the turtle is one of the strangest of living things. Whales must come to the surface frequently to breathe, and it is pretty well known what they feed upon.

The seal cannot remain beneath the sea nearly so long as the whale, and his food is very well known; but the turtle, in all his varieties, in all his ways, is a most mysterious animal. It does not, indeed, seem to matter to him whether he stays beneath the surface for an hour or for a week, nor does it trouble him to spend an equal time on land if the need arises.

Your turtle is neither fish, flesh, nor fowl, yet his flesh partakes of the characteristics of all three. Eating seems a mere superfluity with him, since for weeks at a time he may be headed up in a barrel, with the bung out, and emerge, after his long fast, apparently none the worse for his enforced abstinence from food, from light, and almost air.

In the whole category of animal organisms there is none so tenacious of life as the turtle. Injuries that would instantly be fatal even to fish leave the turtle apparently undisturbed, and his power of staving off death is nothing short of marvelous.

Just so soon as the baby turtle emerges from the egg, off he scuttles down to the sea. He has no one to teach him, no one to guide him. In his curious little brain there is implanted a streak of caution based upon the fact that until a certain period in his life his armour is soft and no defence against hungry fish;
