Not only were the stores of classical, but of sacred literature, brought forth and diffused abroad. The Reformers, these noble-minded men, whom we owe an incalculable debt of gratitude, were smitten through the press, to reach the minds of multitudes who could not hear their living voices. But the benefits of the press were not limited to the period of the Reformation. It has ever since continued to be shed abroad its benign influences throughout society. How many millions of copies of the Scriptures has that noble institution, the British and Foreign Bible Society, by its ceaseless press, scattered over the world? And who can calculate the amount of good they have been the instruments of effecting?

an literature. He was upon which our declining ancestors so successfully windled, in the case of the Redeemer, have been turned with but too fatal effect against it by its own success. But as come to our own island. It is not our intention to speak disparagingly of its public press. We cheerfully acknowledge that it exhibits no mean amount of talent; and that it has been hitherto deficient in one thing—it wanted the religious element. The friends of the Redeemer had too long neglected to employ that mighty organ, the press, in the promotion of this cause; but now at length they have been aroused from their long torpor, and are beginning to be discharged of their responsibility. They have resolved to make the newspaper press subservient to the advancement of our common Christianity. Our paper will, without doubt, reach some who are not in the habit of listening to the living voice of the preacher, and we indulge the hope that it may be the means of arresting some wanderers in their downward path, and turning their feet into the ways of life, and causing the blessing of him that was ready to perish to come upon us.

are not constantly informed of any chair or any importance at all affecting the interests of the Romish Church, and that their influence has not been felt as a dead weight in retarding all real progress in both Colonies. They constantly intermeddle with public policy, indifferent to the welfare of citizens or country, so long as the Holy Mother Church advances, and must be met by Protestants, clerical and lay. Mr. Stark's abilities are asserted at every turn. They will contrast favorably with some honorables, whatever office they may fill under Government. How unreasonable to expect that because the schools had more than doubled in number since Mr. Stark's arrival in the Colony, his labors should be like proportionately increased beyond the time and strength of any man! Space forbids at present our entering into detail, but we shall return to the subject.

show where any such it was ever asked for. Has any resolution brought before the Board of Education asserted it? Has any circular sent forth by the Protestant ministers of this City to the brethren in the country declared it? Has any resolution introduced, or passed at either Committee or public meetings, where the question was fully discussed, made any mention of it? Has any one petition, out of the many which have flowed in from all parts of the country, sought it? Has any statements made by the late Inspector of Schools given encouragement to it? Or, any other editorial, or any letter from any correspondence in our papers which was established for the very purpose of giving open and honest expression to the sentiments and wishes of Protestants said any thing about it? presence and blessing was offered by the Rev. David Fitzgerald.

The Chief Justice then rose, and having made a few pertinent observations, concluded by calling on the Secretary to read the Report of the Society's operations for the past year, as proposed by the Committee.

WILLIAM CHURCHILL, Esquire, the Secretary, having been called upon, read the Report.

HON. LA. COLONEL GRAY then moved—

“ That the Report now read be adopted, and printed under the direction of the Committee.”

The Rev. C. Lloyd seconded the motion.

The next Resolution was moved by the Rev. General
CUTLER, and seconded by the Rev. Mr. McMurtry, viz—
