THE SABBATH DAY.

Interesting Services Held in the City

People had to sit on the steps at the Queen's Avenue Methodist Church Sunday night. The edifice held the largest congrenight. The edifice held the largest congregation seen within its walls for many a day. The special occasion was the Sunday school anniversary, and the members rendered assistance in the musical services. A large platform was erected from the pulpit to the choir gallery for the accommodation of the children, and the little ones seated tier above tier with the choir at the top and a magnificent floral display at the bottom of the incline, made the sight pleasing and animated. Rev. C. T. Scott, of West Lorne, preached morning and evening, his remarks being particularly applicable to his juvenile auditors. An open meeting was range south of the Longwood road.

A year ago last January residents of the southern part of the city started to worship in a cosy frame structure capable of accommodating about 200 persons. It is on Emory street, and just outside the city limits. It was erected principally thought the efforts of the workers of Wellington Street Methodist Church. The interior is hardly completed yet, but is comfortable andneat. Achoir of eight and a pretty little organ adorn the front. Rev. J. R. Gundy, ex-president of the London Conference, conducted the consecration services in the afternoon and Rev. Dr. Sanderson preached a suitable sermon. In the evening the little mission was filled with an attentive and earnest congregation. Rev. Benjamin Clement, of Petrolea, president of the London Conference, preached from Matthew xxvii, 22: "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" Mr. Clement delivered an able aermon and the attention of all present seemed rivetted on his words.

Another anniversary of the opening of the First Congregational Church was celebrated Sunday. In the morning Rev. W. J. Clark preached from I. Kings, xix., 4. Rev. James Ballantyne, M.A., conducted the children's meeting and service of praise in the afternoon. The young folks sat in the galleries and took an active part in the singing. Rev. The Sunday school of the Hamilton Road Methodist Church commemorated the return of another year of its vigorous life Sunday. Rev. C. E. Mcintyre, of South London, and Rev. Wm. Godwin, of London West, were the preachers at the respective services, the musical portions of which were particularly well rendered. An open meeting was held in the afternoon.

The management of the young men's meeting in Victoria Hall Sunday afternoon was left in the hands of the Board of Directors. President W. R. Hobbs cocupied the chair, and Ald. Spencer presided at the organ and led the large choir on the platform. Special attention is paid to the music at these meetings. Mr. J. Proprietor Horsman, of the Grigg House was one of the two who went on the stage at Anna Eva Fay's performance the other evening. He said he was as much mystified as anybody and could offer no explanation of the things done. He tied Miss Fay firmly to the upright board by the neck and arms, and strips of sticking plaster were placed over the knots to mark any breakage that might occur. A bystander contended that the manifestations inside the cabinet were made with Miss Fay's own hands, and that she had some trick whereby she could loosen them from the bindings. This theory was given force by the fact that she once emerged from the cabinet with her fastenings unloosened and the plaster intact. Mr. Horsman was placed inside the cabinet holding some papers in his hand on Miss Fay's lap, while a bucket was placed over his head to shut out his vision. "I felt the papers being drawn away from me," said he, "but I could feel no flesh near; I suppose she was clever enough to prevent that. After she lifted the table she asked me to put my hands on it.
