Railway rumblings are being heard around the city hall now. The past few days the extension of the lease of the London and Port Stanley to the Pere Marquette has held the boards. but this matter has been thrown entirely into the shade by the Grand Trunk talk which is now heard. British Liberal Candidate Talks

For a couple of years London has been expecting the Grand Trunk to do something to improve its facilities here, and at different times stories have been published of large sums to be expended by the company on a new depot, new freight house and the improving of the roadbed.

But now comes a story which has a very substantial foundation, and which says that the Grand Trunk has plans prepared which will mean the expenditure of no less a sum than $2,000,000 right here in L ondon. Proposition Coming.

Good Thing for City.

It is said in railway circles that the city might be very glad to have the company build a subway on Wellington street. The crossing is a dangerous one, despite the fact that the company has done all in its power to make it safe by pulling down all high buildings and fences on both sides of the street so that the view of approaching trains is not obstructed.

For some time past the Grand Trunk and the city have sawed off in the matter of repairs to the railway crossings. The reason is that the company is contemplating raising the entire roadbed between London and Hyde Park. It is also the intention to shift the rails further south in the city, so that they will run close to Bathurst street instead of in the center of the block as at present.

Raise the Rails.
