- "But, Mr. Harris," remonstrated the manufacturer, "isn't this rather sudden?"
 - "What if it is ?-isn't the man mine?"
- "We would be willing, sir, to increase the rate of compensation."
- "No object at all, sir. I don't need to hire any of my hands out, unless I've a mind to."
 - "But, sir, he seems peculiarly adapted to this business."
- "Dare say he may be; never was much adapted to anything that I set him about, I'll be bound."
- "But only think of his inventing this machine," interposed one of the workmen, rather unluckily.
- "O yes!—a machine for saving work, is it? He'd invent that, I'll be bound; let a nigger alone for that, any time. They are all labor-saving machines themselves, every one of 'em. No, he shall tramp!"...

George was taken home, and put to the meanest drudgery of the farm. He had been able to repress every disrespectful word; but the flashing eye, the gloomy and troubled brow, were part of a natural language that could not be repressed,—indubitable signs, which showed too plainly that the man could not become a thing.

It was during the happy period of his employment in the factory that George had seen and married his wife. During that period,—being much trusted and favored by his employer,—he had free liberty to come and go at discretion. The marriage was highly approved of by Mrs. Shelby, who, with a little womanly complacency in match-making, felt pleased to unite her handsome favorite with one of her own class, who seemed in every way suited to her; and so they were married in her mistress' great parlor, and her mistress herself adorned the bride's beautiful hair with orange-blossoms, and threw over it the bridal veil, which certainly could scarce have rested on a fairer head; and there was no lack of white gloves, and cake and wine,—of admiring guests to praise the bride's beauty, and her mistress' indulgence and liberality.

Mrs. Shelby had gone on her visit, and Eliza stood in the
