TITLED NEGROES.

Members of the Black Race Who Have Been Knighted by European Sovereigns.

There have been many negroes in Europe and the West Indies who have received distinguished considerations in the way of decorations from the crowned heads of the old world. The Black Roscius—Ira Aldridge—who created such a furoe in Europe many years ago as a tragedian, and who was frequently carried from the thatres in which he performed upon the shoulders of his enthusiastic auditors to his hotel, was loaded down with medals, the insignias of various royal orders, the gifts of kings and queens whom he had charmed and delighted by his magnificent impersonations or the characters he assumed.

Aldridge was a Maryland negro and first went to Europe some time in the forties in the capacity of valet to a distinguished American tragedian, who, discovering his talents and bent of mind, encouraged him to become an actor. He performed in the principal cities of Europe, and it is recorded of him that when he played Iago in the city of Moscow, in Russia, a number of students who had witnessed the performance unhitched the horses after the play was over and dragged him in triumph to his lodgings. In Sweden and Germany and England his name was a household word. He stood in the front rank among the greatest actors of his day, and the nobility of Europe held him in the same regard and treated him with the same consideration that Americans bestow upon Keene or Barrett or Booth or any other great actor who has made himself famous. Ira Aldridge gave no performances in Europe which were not witnessed by one or more members of the royal family of the country he was in. He was very dark in complexion with a full round face. He was nearly six feet in height. He had large, lustrous eyes, and resonant, voice which he kept under perfect control.

As Aaron in "Titus Andronicus" and as the Moor in "Othello," he established cession, and the Catholic Commercial his fame as the most realistic actor who up to that period had ever essayed those roles. The newspapers of that period medals and decorations from other personages were estimated at the time of his death, 1867, to be worth over $250,000. Aldridge owned nine villas situated in various parts of Europe, and each of them handsomely furnished. His principal residence was in the city of London, Eng., where he entertained in a royal manner the legions of friends who sought his company and that of his charming wife, a Swedish baroness, by whom he had three children. He died in 1867 as Sir Ira Aldridge, K.C.M., and a host of other titles given him at various times. Queen Victoria has recently conferred the Victoria cross upon a coal black negro, a corporal in one of the West India regiments, for having saved the life of his commanding officer by throw-ing himself in front of the latter and resciving in his own body the bullets that would have otherwise found lodgment in that of his captain. Peter Salem did something like this during our revolutionary war. In 1878 or 1879 the President of the republic of Liberia conferred upon the American minister, Hon. John H. Smyth, in consideration of friendly services to the republic, the title of "Knight of the Order of African Redemption." In a letter dated at the palace of Madrid, February 11, 1882, King Alfonso of Spain writes to the President of Liberia as follows : Great and Good Friend: Desiring to give you a public testimony of my royal appreciation and my particular esteem, I have had special pleasure in nominating you Knight of the Grand Cross of the Royal Order of Isabel the Catholic. am pleased by this action also to furnish new proof of the desire which animates me to strengthen more and more the friendly relations which happily exist between Spain and the republic of Liberia. the Pope. In 1881 he was appointed private chamberlain to His Holiness Pope Leo dency of the Catholic educational institutions in Liverpool and was at the time of his death spiritual director of the church of St. Andrea delle Fratte in Rome. This is one of the magnificent edifices in the Holv City and the one most frequented by tourists and visitors of all kinds.

Mgr. O'Bryen was well known in this country. Every year for some time past he has spent the summer here. His usual abode was St. Patrick's presbytery, where he was most highly esteemed. He had also many other friends here, who sincerely mourn his loss.

Many of the missions of the Vatican had been entrusted to him. It was he who hore the beretta to His Eminence Cardinal Taschereau, at his installation in Quebec. He had visited almost every country in the civilized world as Papal ablegate. It was said, on his arrival here the last time, that his mission concerned the vexed Manitoba school question. This, however, he always denied, and his mission, if any, has never been known. He had but recently come from St. Paul, Minn., where he assisted at the opening ceremonies of the Hill Semin ary. He had also paid a visit to Archbishon Cleary in Kingston, and just before arriving in Montreal had spent several days with Mr. and Mrs. Shortis at the trial in Beauharnois, whither he had gone to comfort the parents of the young man on trial for his life and whom he had intimately known in Ireland.

Mgr. O'Bryen's title was not that of the Monsignor of a Bishop, nor yet His Grace of an Archbishop, but simply Monsignor, yet he took precedence over both these classes of dignitaries. At many of the state functions in the Vatican he occupied the place imme-diately on the right of the Pope, thus taking precedence of a cardinal.

In appearance Mgr. O'Bryen was very striking. Considerably over six feet in height, he was a man of splendid physique and handsome face. He was universally admired for his nobility of character and rare courtesy, and was especially beloved among the poor of his old parish in Liverpool. As an author, too, he made a great reputation, his work, "Is the Pope a Prisoner, or a Common Sense View of the Roman Question," earning a wide reputation, and was copied into all languages. He, himself, was a great linguist and spoke seven languages with fluency.

A few hours after the death the body was placed in the hands of the undertaker for embalming. For the present the body will be placed in the vault in the Cote des Neiges Cemetery, pending instructions from Rome. Cablegrams have been sent to the church there and also to the late Mgr. THE FREEMASONS

And the Italian Celebrations,

La Revista della Massoneria Italiana, in its issue for June, published a circular letter, which we give below, containing an invitation from the grand master of Italian Freemasonry to the Masonic bodies of other countries to take part in the celebrations to be held in commemoration of the taking of Rome. The document was translated into French, English and German, and was sent round to all the recognized authorities of Freemasonry. In the sending of this circular letter to all the headquarters of Freemasonry, we have a plain proof, says La Croix, that neither the grand orient of France nor the supreme council of the ancient Scottish Rite, which is accepted for France and her dependencies, have broken with the high priest of universal Freemasonry, who has declared: "I have two hatreds in my heart: God and France." It is evident, too, that the grand orient of Italy serves as the sole intermediary between the supreme directory and the grand lodges of other coun-This circular letter will most tries. probably explain the presence in such force of the Masonic bodies at the recent celebrations.
