Worn brows there be, from which have fled The charms by youthful beauty shed; Souls whereon care, as frost, lies chill. And minds which gloomy tempests fill. O, stricken ones! your heads upraise, Tune each faint voice to notes of praise, From lowest depths of woe ye can Yield sweetest fruits to God and man.

The giddy dance, the careless song, No more to aching hearts belong; But, though poor, vain delights have flown, Enduring bliss may be their own. With steady eye, sublimely fixed On the pure realm of joy unmixed, Such live on earth—yet dwell above— And sorrow's harvest fruit is Love
