Contractor Pritchett, whose plastering work in the contagious ward of the new hospital has been the subject of some fault-finding on the part of the building committee, appeared before the committee on Saturday night and satisfied the members that the work was being done as well as possible. under existing conditions. To back up his opinion that the fault is not with the workmanship, Mr. Pritchett agreed to pay all expenses of bringing an expert from St. Louis, should the expert succeed in doing the work any better, but if he did not improve on it the city should pay his expenses. Mr. Pritchett will first try another means of improving the appearance of the plastering, and if he fails his liberal offer may then be accepted. Extracts From Sermons in Several City Pulpits.

Rev. Dr. Dewart, of Toronto, on the Skeptics.

St. James' Presbyterian Church in an Improved Position-An Anniversary at the Askin Street Methodist Church-Notes.

Dr. Dewart on Skeptics.

Rev. Dr. Dewart, of Toronto, well known from his long editorial connection with the Christian Guardian as one of the foremost workers among Canadian Methodists, preached yesterday morning and evening at the Dundas Street Methodist Church. In the evening he addressed the large congregation from the words "I have a message of God unto thee" (Judges iii., 20). The reverend gentleman strongly emphasized the fact that God's messages of truth, like the seed in the parable of the sower, had a different effect on those who heard it, caused by the different relations to God. He mainly addressed the classes: (1) the skeptic (2) the professing believer who is unsaved, and (3) the young people who procrastinate and delay. In speaking of the skeptic or unbeliever, Dr. Dewart said: "By the skeptic I mean those who doubt the truths of the gospel and the reality and power of religion. I remember when if a man was reported to be an unbeliever, he was thought to be a fit object of denunciation. This is neither wise nor right. I believe that as a general rule the moral and spiritual state is intimately related to unbelief. A faith is better than doubt, but doubt may be sincere. The unbeliever should receive kindly consideration. There is no thoughtful person who has not had seasons of doubt. A man may know that infidelity has nothing to offer, and yet feel as if it were impossible to believe. The least we can do is to hear his difficulties. It does a man good to feel that he is understood. A doubter came to me once and after I listened to his doubts I told him my views. I don't know that I answered them, but they did not seem so formidable when he found that I was familiar with them, and in spite of feeling the force of his objections, held fast the faith. If a man acts as if he held a brief in opbasement. The exchange will have a position to Christian faith, there is not much hope of him, while he is in that mood. But if he is a sincere doubter he should seek deliverance from the thraldom of doubt. The unbeliever should give fair and full consideration to the evidence of divine intelligence in the universe, the unity of the Bible, the unique character of Christ, the testimony of sincere Christians, the moral transformations which re-ligion has wrought in character. He should test the promises of God. One cannot believe by an act of the will, but one can use the means that are adapted to strengthen faith in the

"Covetousness" was the subject of Council Asked to Make Another the sermon preached by Rev. A. J. MacGillivray, the pastor of St. James Presbyterian Church. The text was taken from Luke xii., 4: "Take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abun-Inserts the Thin Edge of the Wedge dance of the things which he possesseth." Said the speaker:

One of Christ's listeners interrupted him by requesting that he undertake the work of judge and settle a family quarrel. In thus appealing to Jesus he was disappointed, having misunderstood entirely the nature of the kingdom he came to establish. It was to be heavenly, and not earthly. Neither Roman law, nor Jewish strife, nor question of the division of property would occupy him. He came to implant principles, and to leave these to permeate all forms and phases of life. Dealing with the parable elucidating the text, the speaker dwelt first on the man's estimate of his circumstances and plans, and then on God's estimate. Three fatal mistakes were pointed out in his resolution:

1. In presuming that he had a lease of life for many years.
2. In thinking that the soul could be nourished by perishable things. 3. The attempt to eliminate heaven from the calculation. This latter attempt is as pitiful as it is difficult. The vessel may make her way for a few days with some degree of certainty and safety, and with nothing but chart and compass, but these are not infallible. He is a foolish captain who would trust to these entirely. He must "take the sun" to be sure of the exact position of the vessel. Dead reckoning may be all very well, but the sun cannot be eliminated. So we cannot abolish heaven from the reckoning in ascertaining our position in this world. It is only by the aid of heaven that we enter into heaven.

In closing, the fact was emphasized that at least two are planning regarding every life. Let us all be in harmony with the plans of God concern### ing us. Rev. Canon Dann.

Rev. Canon Dann spoke on the ten commandments in St. Paul's Cathedral, and among other things said: St. Paul told the Corinthian Church that in everything they were enriched by the commandments-through the grace of God given to them. When they became known everything had a new, enriched meaning and value. God gave the commandments to Moses. When Christ came he did not destroy the law nor the prophets, but came to fulfill the commandments, having received a broader and completer meaning. They were, as the apostle said, enriched. "Thou shall have none other gods but me. Thou shalt not take God's name in vain." This was man's duty, as set down in rigid law by God.

"Love thy neighbor as thyself" was one of God's laws. Fear was the governing principle of the ten command-ments, and love the ruling principle of the covenant. The laws are for every subject in the kingdom. There is no one law for society and one for the working people; it is a law to govern every member of the church. These laws were not given by a frowning God out of darkness, but by the divine love, as seen in Christ. He pledges himself to us by his own faithfulness -that he who hungers will be satisfied and he who asks be heard. There are three duties-love of God, love to man and love to self-for we must love our neighbor as ourselves. God is to be dick, of Bothwell, preached appropriate pulled out at the socket.

our motive, God our aim and object. No man is a true citizen of this kingdom who in all his conduct does not look to God. We cannot do our duty to man until we do our duty to God. If we fail in our duty to man it is because we have first failed in devotion to God. If love of man is to be real and lasting it must be built upon love to God. Love to God means true reverence, and the heart that has true reverence will be sure to show it. A follower of God will turn away from every act of irreverence. Christ's law went right to the heart and was certainly a deepening, developing and enrichment of the ten commandments. Christ had not made our duty any lighter or easier, but had made it more firm. It is more searching and more thorough. Christ's church was a kingdom, and these were the laws of that

Rev. Ira Smith. Rev. Ira Smith, of the Talbot Street Baptist Church, last night began a series of discourses on the Lord's Prayer. He dwelt last night on the opening words of the prayer, "Our Father which are in heaven." He said

Don't let us think it is the mere form and the words that constitute the essence of prayer. It is the reality of the worship of the soul before God that constitutes actual prayer. Jesus gave this model—the Lord's Prayer. touches upon every relation of life, upon the whole conduct and manner of life, upon everything that concerns us, upon everything that concerns God, upon everything that constitutes our relationship with God. Our Father which art in the heavens! Did you ever stop a little while to ponder that? It seems to me that by this frequent phrase the Lord Jesus intends to convey to your mind and mine the extensiveness of the deity. What is the breadth and scope of this prayer? Who may say "Our Father which art in heaven?" Can all say "Father, Father, which art in heaven?" Yes, because the grace of God is not shut out from any man. No. because every man has not experienced the grace of God. Jesus demands that there should be regeneration, that there should be birth, a begetting. I do not beget myself. That is an act of God-it is God's own personal, sovereign act upon and in and for the soul. It is God's grace. not my willing. What am I to do? I am only to ask our Saviour Jesus Christ, and as many as receive him shall become sons of God.

Church Notes.

Rev. A. J. MacGillivray, on behalf of the managers of St. James' Presbyterian Church, has presented a short report of a very encouraging character, showing the financial standing of the congregation. At the beginning of the year the total debt was $9,100. By the sale of the manse, and moneys received from the Kent estate, the debt has been reduced to $4,881. The interest, which at the beginning of the year was $540, is now $233. The rate of interest has also been reduced from 6 to 5 per cent. The position of the congregation financially is much brighter than for many years past. Rev. H. R. Diehl, of Florence, occupied the pulpit in Christ Church yes-terday. Rev. J. H. Moorhouse preached harvest thanksgiving sermons at Florence and Aughrim. Rev. Alex. Fullerton, of Dungannon, Ireland, who is visiting Canada, preached yesterday morning in the First Methodist Church to a large audience. Rev. Mr. Fullerton, while in the city, is the guest of Mr. Thomas McCormick. Rev. H. A. Dickson, of Toronto, occupied the pulpit in the Memorial Church yesterday, and preached to large congregations. His arguments are convincing, and his manner of presenting them striking. Sunday school anniversary services at the Askin Street Methodist Church yesterday were very largely attended. Singing by the children, accompanied by the excellent orchestra of the school, the whole under the able direction of Mr. John Ward, was a feature of each service. Rev. Mr. Cobbleand interesting discourses. afternoon meeting the retiring superintendent, Mr. Richard Dunn, presided and addresses were delivered by Rev. Ira Smith and Rev. Mr. Cobbledick. The newly-elected superintendent of the school, Dr. S. P. Reynolds, was introduced and also spoke briefly. Rev. T. S. Johnson, of Adelaide Street Bap'tist Church, preached a practical sermon yesterday morning from Psalm cvi., 15: "And he gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul." Speaking of the varied causes of "soul leanness." he said many persons were content with taking one good spiritual meal on Sunday, and then starved their souls all the rest of the week. he asked, "would the body 'How."
