Tremendous Volume of Sales Last Week---Comparison of Prices With those of Last Year---The Situation One of Great Interest.

Has Wall Street discounted peace? This is one question the public are now asking. STOCK MARKET COMMENT

What Leading Financial Journals Have to Say of the Present Situation and the Very Great Activity Among Speculators.

(N. Y. Journal of Commerce.)

Conservative brokers admit that the stock market has got beyond the stage where from the investment standpoint the general list of securities are attractive, and many of them display their inaction by counseling purchases only on reactions. Yet with the feeling exists in Wall Street circles that, whether justified or not, a higher level of prices will be seen within the next six months. To those suggesting that the best class of stocks are on a bond basis—in some cases almost a Government bond basis—comes the answer that low money rates warrant such a condition. The rich captains of industry find it unsatisfactory to reap only a paltry 2 per cent from idle money in trust companies when opportunity to obtain 3½ per cent and incidentally gamble on the country's future knocks at their door. Strange as it may seem in the light of past history, the big men, not the so-called lambs have made the present stock market. No such general participation of the outside public as in 1901—or for that matter 1902—has taken place, and yet prices average higher. Ever since 1902 it has been the big speculators who have occupied the centre of the stage, taking the brunt of the 1903 slow panic—which reduced many of them to the ranks—and the fruits of the subsequent unexampled recovery. Today, flushed with their success, the future seems golden-hued, a belief based on bumper crops, large bank clearings, record-breaking railroad earnings—last but not least, business prosperity. The highly satisfactory state of the iron and steel industry, the barometer of trade, is alluded to, the big combine having all its mills full of orders for a good time to come. The concentration of railroad control in a comparatively few hands which has worked such wonders in the anthracite coal industry, is expected to bring like results in other directions. In a word, the natural exuberance accompanying good times, present and prospective, is making itself felt. To suggest the old adage relative to making hay while the sun shines in these times of stock market enthusiasm may strike a jarring note, and yet it would seem appropriate. Granting that bright outlook for another year's prosperity, there is every indication that Wall Street in its own peculiar way is discounting too rapidly. More orderly progress may save a crash later on which, even though temporary in its effect, would be decidedly unpleasant in its consequences. The tendency shown by speculation to turn toward lower-priced issues would indicate that the danger of further concentration on recent high-priced market-leaders is becoming realized. The course of money the next few weeks will be watched with interest for its bearing on stock market operations. Pools and syndicates, evidences of whose marked activity has recently been very apparent, seem confident that no stringency will occur despite the fact that reserves are down to a low level and the yearly drain from the west already in operation. The surplus of the associated banks is now only $9,356,000 with compares with $57,375,000 a year ago and $20,677,000 in 1903. Although the surplus is at so low a level, demands for moving the indicated bumper crop promise to be larger than ever before. Another factor which should not be lost sight of is a consideration of the ability of the banks to finance a stock market campaign is the loan account, this standing $45,550,000 higher than for 1904. Recourse, it is true, may be had to Europe for accommodation, as was the case in 1902; but, conceivably, the response may not be so ready as is generally thought.

(N. Y. Evening Post, Saturday.)

The stock market today was a thoroughly uninteresting affair until the Clearing House figures showed that the banks had suffered a further loss of reserve, reducing that item to the lowest level reported in this week since 1893, when a deficit was shown. This was due to the heavy withdrawal of cash for the interior, which was not, however, fully reflected in the drain of $1,244,200, which the statement indicated. On the appearance of the bank statement the market became active, closing at about the highest prices of the day. These were in many instances below yesterday's final figures.

The relative firmness of the war issues here and abroad has reflected the growing optimism of the world's markets over the outcome of the peace conference. Although prices have fluctuated as the news appeared disturbing or reassuring, the situation has at no time been interpreted as sufficiently alarming to cause a general collapse. Even at Paris, where the investing classes have everything to gain by a peace treaty signed, the depression of Tuesday was short lived. There, as at London, the feeling prevailed that a compromise would be effected, and that the efforts of President Roosevelt would ultimately prove successful. While the outlook is clouded today, it seems scarcely possible that the indemnity proposal, which has been the chief bone of contention should prove an insurmountable barrier now that so many difficulties have been removed. Should the war be renewed in consequence of an insistence on such a demand, however, Japan might find herself in an awkward position. At any rate, it would scarcely strengthen her credit abroad, for she would be forced to borrow soon again, on terms that would emphasize the hazards of renewed war.

The heavy drain of harvesting funds to the west has important bearing on money market conditions. While large withdrawals were expected, the movement has reached within a fortnight, unusual proportions, and because of the activity at the west, and the extent of the preliminary demands on Eastern centres the outflow has become the chief factor with which our markets will have to reckon. Yesterday's late rise in call money rates to the 3 per cent level placed the market at the highest basis for this week since 1902, when stringent conditions prevailed. The present situation bears, however, little resemblance to that period for conditions are vastly better than what they were then, and the outlook in every way brighter. The demands for crop moving funds are, however, sufficiently pressing to give peculiar interest to the fall readjustment and the preparations of the banks to meet it.

The movement, through the Sub Treasury is also becoming an important factor in the outflow. So far this month the banks have lost by telegraphic transfers alone $2,100,000, or $100,000 more than last year's entire August telegraphic withdrawals amounted to. As compared with 1903, this year's loss is already four-fold the drain encountered during August. If the movement keeps up at its present volume the month's transfers will break all August records of recent years. This situation is interesting in view of the fact that the heavy drain is only just begun and that three or four weeks will elapse before the movement reaches its height. Bankers in touch with western conditions believe that the late September and early October withdrawals this year will be unusually large, and that because of the large crops to be harvested the demand for currency may continue heavy until the middle of November.

THE SALMON PACK

VANCOUVER, B. C. Aug. 27—One million cases in round figures is the result of the salmon packing in British Columbia this season. The Fraser River is responsible for 800,000 cases and the rest comes from the Naas and Skeena rivers in the North. Puget Sound put up between 600,000 and 700,000, so that for the first time since traps were placed in United States waters this province has beaten the Sound canners.

The cause of this is a curious one, according to Commissioner J. P. Babcock, the piscatorial expert whom the government brought from California to look after this big industry. He thinks the low water in the Fraser had much to do with the fish fighting shy of the region where the American traps are situated. Because of the smaller volume of water in the Fraser this year the yellow current did not extend round into the bays and coves on the other side to the extent customary at the time the salmon are running. The fish like to keep as much as possible in the fresh water, and this time the supply on the United States side was small.

SHIPS AND WRECKS.

Lloyd's Register of Shipping shows that the gross reduction in the effective mercantile marine of the world amounted last year to 807 vessels in excess of 100 tons, of whish 344 were steamers and 463 sailing vessels. Not a very heavy loss that, in proportion to the number of vessels employed in transacting the world's commerce. The steady increase in size of steamers has been accompanied by an increase in the safety of such vessels. Naval architecture has made great strides in the direction of safety—strides which have had an effect not only on the huge passenger liner, but also on the ordinary freight steamer. With collisions and groundings out of the reckoning, the accidents that can happen to the modern vessel and caus her complete destruction are few, for it is seldom that a ship is lost owing to her inability to weather a gale at sea. The figures for 1904 were naturally affected by the war in the Far East a large number of Japanese and Russian vessels being lost, while some neutral ships were also removed from the register list on account of the action of one or the other of these belligerents.—Boston Hld. Aug. 28.

MARINE NOTES

The other will be launched October 1, and will engage in fresh fishing in the winter months. Her dimensions are keel, 70 feet; depth of hold 10 feet 6 inches; beam 24 feet 6 inches.

Schr Chippewa, at Charleston, S. C. 23rd. from Boston reports passed a derelict sch E. L. Warren in lat. 35.50 lon 70.37.

RUSSIA'S FOGN TRADE

The foreign trade of Russia in 1904 was not influenced by the war so adversely as might have been expected. The imports and exports by way of the European border were $792,000,000 against $790,000,000 in 1903, or about 1 cent. The imports were $300,000,000 against $310,000,000 in 1903, a decrease of only $10,000,000. Agricultural implements and locomotives formed a large share of the imports. Hard coal, coke, copper, iron, steel and other minerals were imported in fairly large quantities. Germany's share of the imports was more than double that of Great Britain, the proportion of 225 to 102. Compared with Germany's share with that of the United States, the proportions were as 225 to 62. Russia's exports in 1904 by way of the European border were 5,300,000 rubles more than in 1903, having been 955,000,000 and 949,700,000 roubles respectively. One-half, if not more, of her 1904 exports can be put to the credit of grain, hay, food products. The rest was made of wood, petroleum and other raw materials of commerce. Germany is the largest purchaser of Russian goods; next in order is Great Britain.—Exchange.
