GREATEST FIELDER IS RICHEST "EX" SINCE HE QUIT GAME

When the fans think of Fielder Jones they think of the manager of the "hitless wonders" of the American league—the Chicago White Sox which Frank Chance's Cubs.

Or, if they peruse the sport page closely, they may know him as president of the Northwestern league and an Oregon lumber king.

Fielder Jones is considered the wealthiest player living. He made a fortune in baseball, because Charley Comiskey believes in paying men who deliver the goods, and Jones invested wisely, so that he was able to refuse an offer of $15,000 a year to manage a major league club. He'd have taken the offer if the owner had agreed to sell him a large block of the club stock.

But who remembers Fielder A. Jones as the worst New England daddy of pennant winning managers? Fielder Jones was a good ball player when he broke into the majors in 1896, with Brooklyn. Hanlon made him a better one. He brought out of the youngster everything he possessed.

Fielder Jones lived up to his name. He was a fielder of the Jimmy McAleer and Walter Brodie type. And that's the last word in baseball. He had everything that goes to make up a ball player, a gentleman and a great leader. He was fast, could hit, and his fielding was marvellous.

When Jones quit to enter the lumber business in 1908, baseball lost an idol. Comiskey, it is said, handed Jones a blank signed contract and told him to name his own figure to lead the team, but the old Roman refused to part with stock, so Fielder like Bill Lange, quit.

President F. A. Jones of the Northwestern league lives in Portland, Ore., with offices in the Chamber of Commerce building. He also handles his immense lumber interests from this office.

In 1899 Brooklyn won the pennant and repeated in 1900. In 1909 Jones, in 1908 he fielded 944 and batted 286; in 1909 he fielded 969 and batted 309 for 38 games.

Jones saw a fat contract when the American league began raiding the National in 1901, and jumped to the Chicago organization.

He went to Chicago, and Chicago won the pennant that year. In 133 games Fielder batted 325. He also scored 119 runs, a little less than a run per game; he fielded 923.

In 1908 Jones was manager of the White Sox. He won the American league pennant and did the unexpected when he led the Sox to victory over the Cubs, in the world's series.

That year Jones led all league outfielders, with an average of .958, for 144 games and hit but 230. Winning the big series gave Jones about all there was in it for a player-manager, and he turned his attention to the lumber business.

As records stand, Jones holds second place among all fielders, with his .958 averages in 1903 and 1906. Harry Bay, in 1904, topped him by two points.

Jones refuses to name the greatest player, but unhesitatingly pronounces Ed Walsh the greatest of pitchers. And those who appreciate the work of the "Big Moose" has done for the Sox can realize how Jones feels.

Jones began his career at Birmingham, N. Y., in 1895. He was with Springfield next, and with Brooklyn from 1896 to 1900. From 1901 to 1908 he was with the White Sox. This is his baseball career of 14 years.

He was born at Shingle House, Pa., which has been on the map ever since Jones was born there. He was born August 13, 1871, so he is 41.

Jones says that he believes baseball is improving all the time.

STALLINGS WILL WAGER PLANTATION ON BRAVES

Probably nine fans in every ten throughout the country would place a large bet on the Athletics to win the coming world's series if they could find anybody to take the other end. The willingness to wager will obtain regardless of who wins the National league pennant, for the average baseball follower cannot see anything in the tender circuit, strong enough to give the Macks a battle. There is one man, however, who will not concede Connie even an edge if it comes about that the Braves are the other half of the Stallings is this optimist.

George T. Stallings is the optimist who wants to buy a ticket on the Hub chances. Being manager of the Braves, George T. is possibly some what prejudiced in their favor, but he certainly is sincere.

The other day in a jesting mood some person told Stallings that if Boston had to play the Mackmen, he never would be able to get them out in the first inning. This remark served the desired purpose of getting a rise out of the Georgian and he proceeded to state his convictions with some heat.

"Don't you believe that we will never get them out," snapped the Boston boss. "We'll put them out in the first inning and in eight other innings of every game. I am not blind to the fact that Connie Mack has a great club, but I will bet my plantation down in Georgia and everything else I have in the world that the series will go more than five games, which was as far as New York could extend it last fall.

"My club will fight the Athletics as they never have been fought before and will show them a trick or two in getting runs and cutting them off. Our pitchers certainly will be both there and it ought not to be so very hard for us to score a run or two. Mind you, I am not making any prediction that we will beat the American league champions. They out class us in hitting strength. But they will know before we get through with them that they have been in a battle, beaten, you can gamble on that. We will admit defeat only when the Mackmen put it on us four times. If they're able to do that, stranger things have happened than our being victorious over the Philadelphia club. Two months ago if I had told you that we would be in first place before the season was over, you would have called an alienist and had my head examined. But we are up there and if we get into the world's series we will make somebody nuts."

"Yes," chimed in Johnny Evers.

While the Beavers failed to win the pennant they enjoy the unique position of winning every series in the league. The league was made up of a series of five games with each team, the Beavers have won three out of every series, but owing to Milo taking five straight from D. & F. gives them the right to first place. The Milo team had just won a series from the Easterns of South Brewer, winners of the Eastern Maine League and the Beavers are naturally elated at winning the series from Milo.

The Beavers close out the season tonight having won 16 games out of a total of 24 played.
