

FATHER McAULEY'S EVIDENCE VERY DAMAGING TO COLLINS

Priest Identifies Articles in Suspect's Valise as Being Stolen from Him

Other Things Found in Prisoner's Grip Belonged to the Murdered Woman--Detective Killen Tells of Prisoner Admitting Having a Gold Watch, But Declared He Threw It Away--Other Witnesses Give Important Testimony--Hearing Adjourned One Week.

Hopewell Cape, Sept. 28--The preliminary examination of Thomas F. Collins, charged with the murder of Mary Ann McAuley, was not concluded today, as was expected on account of the absence of two witnesses, said to be out of the country at present. The most important evidence today was given by Detective Killen and Father McAuley, the priest at whose house the murder occurred.

Detective Killen told an interesting story of the search for and subsequent capture of Collins since he was arrested. The detailed statement made to him by Collins, which was taken down in writing, Killen also produced the articles taken off Collins and related to the prisoner before he was handed over to the Albert county authorities.

Daniel J. Buckley.

The first witness called this morning was Daniel J. Buckley, a farmer, residing at Spruce Lake. He said he had seen Collins in his barn and asked for a place where he could put up for the night. He directed him to John Galt's house.

William Heffernan, St. John, testified he was at Spruce Lake at the hotel at that time engaged in wheeling in wood. He said he saw Collins in the barn and took him to his house. He said he saw Collins in the barn and took him to his house.

Wm. Oraig.

William Craig, Back Bay, Charleott county, sailor, said he was at Red Rock. Witness was going along the road with his team and overtook this man and he asked him the road to St. Stephen.

Frank Keough.

Frank Keough, the man who captured Collins, told an interesting story. "I met Collins," he said, "on August 24th about two miles from Bonny River. He was going up the road in the direction of St. Stephen. Shortly after he had passed by Taylor and me in consequence of what I told me I hit him up my horse and we started after the man who had passed.

James Young testified to seeing Collins with Michael Joyce at Forc's Glen on the night of 26th August. He had a conversation with him and he thought he saw the prisoner have a gold watch.

Detective Killen.

Detective Killen, St. John, then took the stand. He told of being sent out to capture Collins and of the search made in the vicinity of St. George. Speaking of his meeting with Collins he said I jumped out and said "Hello, Tommy, jump out."

Important developments in the Collins murder case have transpired since Saturday.

It is believed that the finding of this valise and the announcement of its contents will prove very important in the trial now held for the murder of Miss McAuley.

It has been impossible to learn what valise contained except that there was a ring in it, which is supposed to have been taken from the house. Whether it was the ring that had become of it is not known.

Rev. E. A. McAuley.

He had got up about 6 in the morning and hitched up the horse. About 7 o'clock Miss McAuley came down stairs and said that it was too hot to go to town and he could put the horse back in the barn.

Detective Killen produced in court a small parcel of things which he had found in the valise. They consisted of four red handkerchiefs, a couple of white ones, silver watch, piece of brass chain, lead pencil and some collar buttons and cuff links.

Stephen Garland.

Stephen Garland and his wife, Emma Garland, proprietors of the Garland Hotel, told of having seen Collins occupied. He had not stayed at their place over night but had gotten his tea there and gone to the hotel.

James Young.

James Young testified to seeing Collins with Michael Joyce at Forc's Glen on the night of 26th August. He had a conversation with him and he thought he saw the prisoner have a gold watch.

Father McAuley.

Father McAuley's evidence was to the effect that he hired Collins at Albert and Collins' work was attending the horse, splitting wood and doing other chores.
