Career help service

by Kent Cochrane

Alberta Manpower has created a new career information service called the Career Hotline.

Since last November Albertans have been able to call a toll-free number to get answers to any career-related questions.

Four career counsellors provide information such as how to find or change jobs, how to retrain or obtain further education, and how to obtain government wage subsidy assistance.

"The Career Hotline provides any kind of job-related information," said Connie Boyce, a Public Affairs Officer in the government's Communications Department.

"The counsellors can find the programs and services which are best for each individual caller," said Boyce.

"A lot of the callers are unemployed and need help on how to find jobs and on what careers to go into," she said.

Interested persons can also obtain information on the Alberta Youth Employment and Training Program.

This program provides wage subsidies to employers who hire recent graduates.

Peggy Dutton, the manager of Alberta Manpower's career Information Services, which runs the Career Hotline, emphasizes that it provides only information.

The Career Hotline does not have actual job listings, she said.

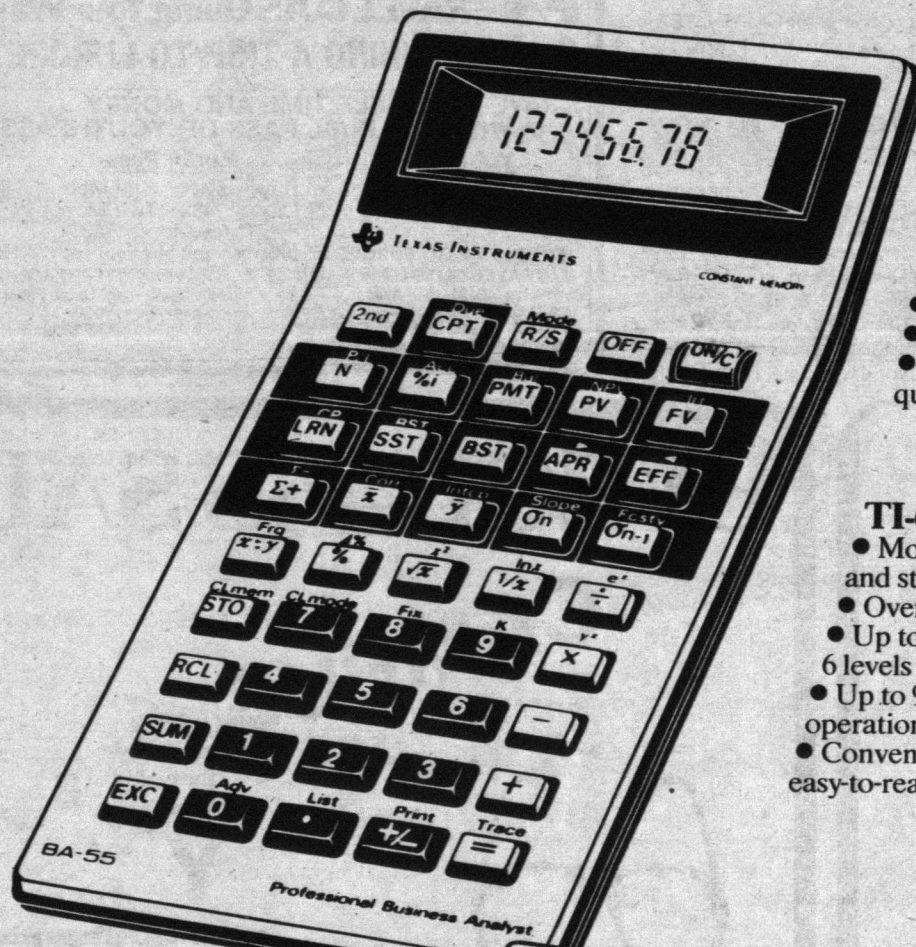

Dutton said that the counsellors can advise people on how to market themselves and create their own jobs in a tight job market.

They also have information on federal and provincial job creation and training programs and sources of financial assistance for further education.

The Career Hotline is free of charge, and the number is toll-free in Alberta.

In Edmonton call 422-4266.
