Psyc students having problems with faculty?

There are apparently problems between psychology students and some of their faculty.

"I think that the crux of the problem is the childish attitude of the faculty in the Psychology Department," said one student. "They are fighting with each other to such a degree that something as simple as the faculty-student lounge has difficulty in becoming a reality."

"These so-called psychologists are putting themselves forward as being the enlightened in the field of human behaviour," the student continued, "who in the hell are they trying to fool. They can't even decide upon their own behaviour."

Students have been trying to establish a student-faculty lounge, for which a room has been allotted in Keirstead Hall, for some time. According to one of the students involved, who refused to have his name used, the story of the lounge takes several strange twists.

Vicki Grey, a faculty member in charge of co-ordinating the lounge, at first refused to give out information on the progress of the lounge.

The students found out that the furniture for the lounge had arrived six months ago but Vicki Grey refused to allow it to be put into the lounge even when the undergraduates obtained a voluntary work party.

The problem was broached at the student-faculty meeting (12 professors, 2 graduate students, and 2 undergraduate students.) and faculty member Ann Cameron told the undergraduates that they should not waste time at the meeting by questioning the construction of the lounge.

The undergraduates agreed to meet with Vicki Grey again, but she then proceeded to ask the 4th year student representative to leave her office because she claimed he argued with her too often, according to our source.

She then agreed in consultation with the 3rd year student representative to put in the furniture only if the volunteers constructed a seminar room for her first. However, the students are not to be permitted the use of the seminar room.

The problem remains unsolved.

Bomb scare in SUB

By KEN CORBETT

The blue lounge in the SUB was victimized by a bomb scare Wednesday afternoon.

An anonymous call was received at CHSR at approximately 3:30 p.m. The caller, apparently male, warned of a supposed bomb concealed somewhere in the blue lounge.

The CHSR member, whose name could not be obtained at presstime, notified the SUB office of the threat. The staff on hand at the time, SUB Director Kevin McKinney, Ken Corbin and Steve Fanjoy, cleared the blue lounge and locked the doors. The Smoke Shoppe also co-operated by closing down. The downstairs was left to operate as normal.

McKinney then contacted the campus chief of security, Charles Williamson, and a thorough search of the blue lounge and vicinity was made. No bomb was found, however, and the lounge was re-opened shortly after.

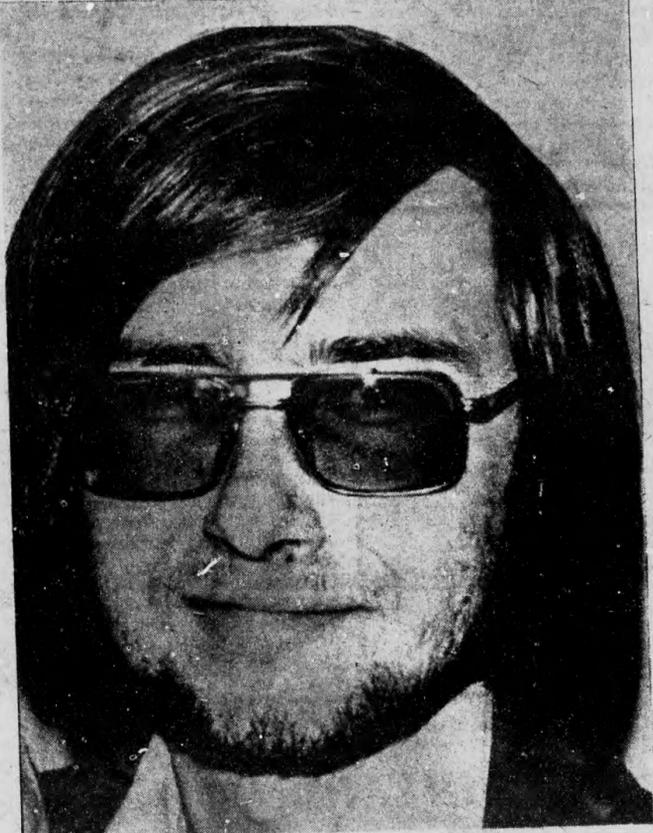

"I felt that what I did was adequate for the circumstances," commented McKinney. In the future, he said, the entire building will be cleared, and the fire department will be called upon to render assistance.

Williamson said that efforts to ascertain the identity of the mystery caller have been so far fruitless, and did not hold out much hope for apprehending this person. "What would you do about a phone call? The person just spoke and hung up." Other than this inconclusive phone call, he said, he had nothing else to go on.

McKinney said that he considered the bomb scare as a serious offense. Any student suspected of such an offense would be referred to the Student Disciplinary Committee. A non-student would be dealt with by the civil authorities downtown.

Our fearless leader Editor-in-Chief Edison Stewart has announced his resignation effective this Sunday when an election for the position will be held. Stewart plans to move on to bigger and better things with the Gleaner.

GSA proposal goes to senate

A 12-page report recommending the creation of a graduate representative position on the University of New Brunswick senate will be presented to the senate at its regular meeting November 20.

John Reid, a graduate student, said the seat would be an effective channel for the valuable contributions which graduate students can make to UNB. There are now six student senators, not necessarily representing a specific faculty.

Drug analysis done on campus

By GEOFF RHODENIZER

For the past three years Ron Woznow, a post-graduate student, has been conducting analysis of drugs for the now defunct Insight.

Insight obtained the drugs from the police and people who wanted to know what it is they are taking. Since Insight is no more, people can only get drugs analyzed by giving them to a doctor, who will then give them to Woznow for analysis.

The main test that Ron runs is to discover whether the drug is an amphetamine, a barbiturate, or an opiate. Once this is discovered further tests are done to discover exactly what the drug contains.

The Insight program and Woznow have tested most of the drugs in Fredericton for the past three years, and Woznow stated that never once was there mescaline in town. It was always "amphetamine for the rush, LSD for the hallucinogenic, and horse tranquilizer or rhinosceros tranquilizer for the doped up feeling."

If you are curious as to exactly what it is you are taking the analysis service is still available through your doctor.

Three students vie for B of G

Three University of New Brunswick Fredericton students will compete in university governors' board elections to be held November 27.

The three—all juniors—include Brian F. Forbes, a business student from Moncton; Peter Galoska, a science student from Pointe Clair, Que. and John MacPherson, an artsman from Saint John.

There are three student positions on the board: One student from Fredericton serves for two years while one from the capital and another from Saint John hold one-year positions.

Craig Wilson of Saint John was recently elected to his second term while Mike Richard, a UNBF law student, is serving his second year. Student representation on the board has existed for two years.

seat. Nominees for rep-at-large include Kathleen Westman, an arts sophomore from Ste. Foy, Que.; Suser Manzer, an arts junior from Fredericton; Gary Tower, a business senior from Bathurst; Derwin Gowan, an arts freshman from St. Stephen and Howard Pride, a business senior from Pte. Clair, Que.

Last year there was no engineering nomination.
