

Organized Capital and Labour should maintain the inviolability of agreements, both in spirit and in letter. Good faith is the foundation of all social stability, and when the representatives of Capital and Labour enter into agreements on the collective basis for which both parties contend, such covenants should be observed.

The General Assembly affirms its conviction that the right of the workers to organize is fundamental in the present state of society, and that the right of the members of each craft to deal through their chosen representatives with the management of the industries in which they are working should be recognized at once by their employers and by the State.

In view of the fact that the rights of the entire community are imperilled by general sympathetic combinations, whether of Capital or workers, the General Assembly urges the Government at once to provide machinery for the adjustment of the differences and misunderstandings between employers and employed, and for the maintenance of the rights of all classes in the community.

The General Assembly commends the Government for the appointment of the Mathers Commission, and urges further investigation into the causes of the present unrest, and immediate action to remove them as far as they can be reached by the