PHELI AND THE WEATHER

SM, HAVE YOU SEEN AN ANGRY, RED-HEADED LADY, RESEMBLING ME, WITH A TRUNK STRAP, APPARENTLY LOOKIN' FOR SOMEBODY

They expected nothing better than that he would move the collection to Berlin. However, he made a wise disposition of the estate when he presented the pictures to Munich, and this day they are among the chief treasures of the city.

Ten years later the Kaiser, who appears to be a particular favorite with eccentric will-makers, was left a beautiful house, surrounded by large grounds, in Southern Austria. He accepted the gift, and since then has used the premises as a convalescent home for officers of the German army. He has received several other bequests of a less important character, but his custom has been to relinquish his claims in favor of those who were his near kin of the testator.

The fact is recalled that the foundation of the large private fortune of Queen Victoria was laid by a bequest from a subject of whom she heard for the first time when the contents of his will were announced. This was John Camden Neild, who left her $3,000,000, "begging her Majesty's most gracious acceptance of the same, for her sole use and benefit and that of her heirs." The will was not contested, and the Queen, having accepted a handsome monument to Mr. Neild, accepted the money and wisely invested it. Neild was the son of a jeweler who had done work for George III., and had left a fortune of more than a million dollars. His son was an eccentric character, and lived in the most miserly fashion, but was shrewd enough in his investments to more than double his capital. Neild's bequest inspired a number of others to leave their fortunes to Queen Victoria, and some of them were accepted, though others were immediately handed over to either the relatives or to some charity. For many years past no British sovereign has accepted money thus acquired.

WOMEN WARRIORS

The German Emperor delights to surround himself at the grand parades with four "colonelles." These noble warriors are the Empress, his daughter, the Princess Victoria Louise, the Princess of Schaumburg-Lippe, and the Grand Duchess of Hesse-Darmstadt. Accompanied by these four Princesses, the Emperor passes before the regiment, and the crowd gives voice to its admiration.

The "colonelles" are, in fact, superb attractions in their striking uniforms. The Princess Sophia of Prussia, sister of the Emperor and wife of King Constantine of Greece, shares the military state of her sister-in-law, the Empress.

The Empress of Russia, born Princess Alix of Hesse, is chief of the Regiment of Uhlans and of the dragon regiment of the Prussian Guard; Princess Marie of Roumania is "colonelle" of the Roehfort regiment, and the Queen Mother, Marguerite of Italy, does not conceal her pride that she is chief of a battalion of Prussian chasseur.

Harry Merson, an Ottawa pickle manufacturer, has told the police that he introduced Alex. Ribenstein to a young woman and left them together about one o'clock on the morning he was murdered.

German Emperor Most Fortunate in This Respect—Bequests Usually From Eccentric Subjects

It was something of a coincidence that within a very short period two wills should have been offered to probate, one leaving a great fortune to Emperor William and the other bequeathing a large sum to King Alfonso of Spain. The benefactor of Alfonso was Albert Sapene, mayor of a city in the south of France, a man whom the King of Spain in all probability had never seen. Sapene ignored his relatives altogether in disposing of his property and they engaged counsel to contest the will.

Hermann Knorr, a Saxon landowner, left about $2,750,000 to the Kaiser, cutting off his widow with her dower and an annuity of $200. Knorr was undoubtedly inspired by patriotic motives when he left his fortune to the Kaiser, for his will did not specify William III., but mentioned the reigning Emperor, so that the landowner did not care particularly whether William or his son, the Crown Prince, was the beneficiary. He directed that the money should be used for the purpose of strengthening the army and navy of Germany at the discretion of the Kaiser.

This is not the first bequest the German Emperor has fallen heir to. Five years after he ascended the throne William was made the heir to Count Adolf Schack, who died in Rome. His estate consisted for the most part of a famous collection of paintings and objects of art in Munich, and the burghers of Munich had confidently counted upon the collection being left to the city. Great was their disappointment when the Kaiser was made heir.

Surrendered Art Treasures

They expected nothing better than that he would move the collection to Berlin. However, he made a wise disposition of the estate when he presented the pictures to Munich, and this day they are among the chief treasures of the city.

Ten years later the Kaiser, who appears to be a particular favorite with eccentric will-makers, was left a beautiful house, surrounded by large grounds, in Southern Austria. LIFE ON THE PLANETS

Venus the Only One Habitable Says This Astronomer

Mr. Walter Maunder, the eminent British astronomer, has revived the speculation as to whether the heavenly bodies are inhabited or not by publishing some careful calculations as to their temperature. He shows that the sun's temperature is more than 5,000 centigrade while the moon, owing to its lack of atmosphere, is at night at about the temperature of liquid air. Mercury, who always turns one face to the sun, must be far hotter than anything which we have any knowledge, while Mars must always be at below freezing point.

The more distant planets—Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune—are so far away from the sun that they receive scarcely any heat from him, while they are still in a nearly incandescent condition, and according to Mr. Maunder, have probably no solid nucleus.

Venus, however, has a mean temperature of 69 degrees centigrade, and at the equator one of 85 degrees centigrade, so that, allowing for the difference in pressure, water should boil at its equator. This would send forth vast quantities of steam that the clouds would cut off much of the sun's heat.

Mr. Maunder denies that any planet but Venus can be habitable, and as to Mars he reserves judgment. The planet Mercury, and the distant planets could be too hot for life to exist permanently, while Mars and the moon would be too cold, leaving only Venus as a possibility.

A Dead Language Read at Last

To discover a language—or, rather, to learn to read a language long forgotten—is the achievement of a young Frenchman, M. R. Gauthiot. All people have known of Sogdiana and its people is that Strabo and Herodotus mentioned them, that an Iranian text says that grasshoppers were the scourge of the country, and that a Sogdian portrait appeared on the tomb of Darius Hyaspades. In the deserts of Chinese Turkestan the sands have buried a vast civilization that was forgotten for centuries. The dry sand preserved intact numbers of manuscripts written in unknown characters. These M. Gauthiot managed to decipher by the fortunate finding of fragments that had notes in other known languages.

In Norway people who are not vaccinated are not allowed to vote at an election.

Two inquests held into the death of Ella Franks, aged 16, found shot in her home near Madoc, resulted in open verdicts. The girl's younger foster-brother has been missing since the shooting.

SCHEMES TO BRIDGE ENGLISH CHANNEL

Some Ludicrous and Meant as a Joke, Others Probably Practical But Costly

The project to connect England and France by a tunnel being to the front again, it may be interesting to look at some other schemes for bridging the gulf. Those of Henry Fairbairn, in 1833, were decidedly clever, if wild. The main idea was to take down a considerable portion of the cliff between Dover and Folkestone and fill up the sea for an area of several miles with the material thus obtained. A huge harbor was to be formed at the extremity of the new piece of land, and similar works were to be undertaken at a corresponding point of the French coast. The two harbors were then to be connected by an enormous causeway, about ten miles in length. Further suggestions were that after the harbors had been made and protected by huge sea-walls, communication was to be continued by the construction of a chain bridge, a tunnel, a floating bridge, a bridge of ships, or a great steam ferry. Details of these and many other novel schemes including one for a marine railway to carry ships across the isthmus of Suez, occupy some 250 pages of a now rare treatise.

In 1856 Mr. Charles Boyd published his plans for a "Marine Viaduct or Continental Railway Bridge" between Dover cliffs and Cape Gris-Nez, at a proper altitude for the safe passage of ships of the largest dimensions. The bridge was to be supported by towers rising from the bed of the Channel. The towers themselves, about 500 feet apart, were to have fog-gongs and light-houses.

Perhaps the most ingenious scheme was that propounded in 1891 by the late Angus B. Reach in 1897. This was to take the form of a line of rafts on a timber foundation carried by a bridge of boats, "the rafts to work on hinges on board each boat, so as to yield freely to the action of the sea." Trains were shown in a sketch running up and down the inclines formed by the trough of the sea. A further joke by the same author was a Channel Balloon Line, in which a train was shown on an aerial platform supported by three balloons.
