Remarkable Experience of a Miner With Crooks.

That truth is stranger than fiction is a maxim so well founded that it needs no fresh testimonials to its truth; yet an episode has just occurred in local circles which the NUGGET thinks may be quoted to lend additional emphasis. The nero of the affair is Jacob Klein; a miner of Selwyn creek, and the story he tells indicates that, as he claims, he was the victim of a conspiracy of the rankest kind. One day this week Klein was brought to Dawson by canoe in the custody of a policeman, charged with being insane. He was kept in a cell for a couple of days, after which he was taken before Dr. Thompson for examination. He was subjected to the most rigid tests known to the doctor, who finally declared him to be perfectly sane.

Thereupon Klein was given his liberty, and he at once unfolded to the police officials the story of the dark conspiracy of which he was the victim. For a long time, he says, several miners on Selwyn had east covetous glances at his claim, on which was known to be good pay, and they finally decided to have him sent out of the country, when his claim would be relocated and divided among the conspirators. Accordingly, a complaint was lodged with the police at Selwyn charging Klein with insanity; he was taken in custody and brought to Dawson as set forth above.

On the way down, Klein alleges, the police man offered to give him his liberty if he would leave the country, never to return, which he emphatically declined to do. From this instance Klein is of opinion that the policeman was cognizant of the conspiracy, if not actually a party to it.

An Opinion of Cape Nome.

The following concise and pointed epistle was brought to the Nugger office on Wednesday for publication. The beauty of the letter lies principally in its brevity. The writer evidently has his mind pretty well made up in the matter. At least he does not hesitate to express his views, which appear to be nothing if not honest.
