ported that the matter in question had been explained to their satisfaction, and that the

The fact that Mr. Wilson was re-elected to the office, in spite of the persistent canvass made in the interests of another, by several of the councillors, and by other gentlemen with whom the transient daily is intimately acquainted; in spite, also, of the fact that the election, delayed till the last moment, was hurried on, when one of Mr. Wilson's friends was unavoidably detained from the board, is a sufficient proof that the council were satisfied that there was no "deficiency in the secretary treasurer's account." But the disappointed and unscrupulous editor thought he saw another chance to make a cowardly attack on the character of a man, who has risen in the estimation of the people of his native country, in the face of volumes of just such abuse, and who, if his life is spared will continue to hold the confidence and
