Whether or not the game of arresting is regarded with aversion by the police I know not, I should say it is, when the would-be captive endeavours, might and main, to resist the guardian's efforts. But, when the one o be taken in custody falls readily in line with the captor's wishes, and en-tirely concurs in his proposals, I see no reason why arresting of this kind should be regarded by the police with apathy. It may so happen that cases of this kind occur very seldom; but one guardian of the peace in a large mining centre has recently had ex-perience in a case of this kind, and the captive is an accomplished young lady of Avondale prominent in telegraphy. It would really be good thing if matters were finalized so as these poor old tax-payers (that were tax-payers when they had strength to earn the necessary money to pay the taxes) could be given something in the evening of their lives; something that would not only keep body and soul together, but make them feel at least that they were made of the same flesh and blood as their neighbours who fortunately were in better circumstances.
