sumers as a whole. It is in the interest of every man who purchases clothing, furniture, cutlery, wall paper, tools, or any of the ordinary necessities of life, that the cost of them be lowered, provided this is done without cutting off his own means of livelihood. Let tariff reduction stop short of the point at which it would ruin the industry from which any given mechanic gains his living, and it is all in his favor even on the very article he is engaged in manufacturing; for his wages are generally manufacturing; for his wages are generally fixed, not by the wealth of his employers, but by the international competition in his line of labor. The farmers can only menace line of labor. The farmers can only menace the great mass of townspeople in the course of their agitation by insanely refusing to allow the necessary revenue of the country to be collected on a system that, at the same time, protects the industries of the people; and, should they do this, thegreater damage would recoil upon themselves, for, with the decimation of the towns and cities, their own best market would disappear.

with the decimation of the towns and cities, their own best market would disappear.

And this argument works just as well the other way round. If the farmers are not prosperous, there is no one to buy the output of the factories, and, as a consequence, city life is paralyzed. "Trade and get rich" is an old saying; but if the means of trade are dried up at the source—the ability to purchase—it may well be read "haggle and get poor." No one is particularly astounded that manufacturers do not flock to the Government during the present tariff inquiry, and demand a reduction of the duties. But if they were far-sighted, they might well do so; for an impoverished consuming class will very soon begin to stop their looms and silence their forging hammers, one by one. Over-taxation of their constituency will be as fatal to them as under-protection of their product.

The Patrons show their wisdom in not making their e. sperative store system the sheet anchor of the society. As one of their officers pointed out the other day, it is not the country storekeeper who is getting rich at their expense. He is very often as hard worked and as hard pressed as the farmer; and in the long run our people will find the natural laws of competition, supply and demand to be better distributors than any socialistic device, large or small. The field in which any organized effort to help the farmers—in this time at least—must do its best work, is that of polities. Some Ministerial journals are very fond of advising them these times to build good roads, to try many improved kinds of farming, to paint their fences and to stop keeping dogs. But the smell of the herring is plain to all. They are exceedingly anxious that the farmer shall not make it awkwardfor their

But the smell of the herring is plain to all. They are exceedingly anxious that the farmer shall not make it awkward for their party by demanding lower taxation and better foreign trade facilities at the hands of Parliament. It would be politically safe for them to send out a royal commission to investigate the great question as to whether or not the cow should be milked from the right side or the left; and there is no doubt that a couple of lawyers, a brace of politicians and a political farmer could collect some very valuable hints for the farmers wives on this point. But when the farmer wakes up to the necessity of real reform of the tariff, they see political peril in the demand, and begin, with one consent, to try and attract his attention to something else. But the steady growth of such purely political movements as the Patrons of Industry show that they have not been drawn off the scent as yet by even the most maladorous herring; and they have but to push ahead to win not only the willing ear of the touring Ministers, but the ready obedience of Parliament. This country is always ruled by that vote which is best organized and which knows best what it wants.
