Madame Tissot interrupted her hastily, sot has told you what I propose?" if Madame Tissot interrupted her hastily.

"Of course, my dear girl. I do know something of your affairs, and it is for that reason that I am trying to help you. When I heard of your unhappy situation I said to myself, this poor child is in need of someone to advise—to help her. That is why I asked you to come here." She put her arm through the girl's and led her toward a chair. "But, come, let us sit down."

"I am sure it was very kind of you," "I am sure it was very kind of you, "first, my dear, I wish to speak to you concerning a most worthy young man, a dear friend of mine, who loves you with all his heart.

"Loves me?" inquired the girl, half-rising from her chair. "Whom do man?"

"Monsieur Emile D'Este."

"So that's what you gow will be safe. Do you agree?"

She turned away, unable to hide her annoyance and rapid voice. "Indeed, it is you who are mistaken. This deed, it is you who are mistaken. This into my ears. You see, when he was a child I was his nurse—his bonne, therein the propose?" he said.

INCORRIGIBLE BOY WAS KEPT IN CELLAR

Was Withdrawn When the Facts Were Told.

[Special to The Advertiser.] Ingersoll, Aug. 16.—That there are usually two sides to a story was demonstrated yesterday in connection with ne charge of assault against a local nan, who admitted having punished his boy by keeping him in the cellar his boy by keeping him in the cellar for upwards of twenty-four hours. The youngster, who is only twelve years of age, gave a very straightforward account of what transpired, comitting features of the case, however, that prompted the father to adopt the method he did.

The parent mentioned that the lad had been pilfering from time to time.

had been pilfering from time to time, that he was dishonest when sent to make purchases, that he had been in juvenile court on more than one occasion, and that he would leave home early in the morning and frequently not return until 10 o'clock at night.

The father acknowledged that he had probably gone a little too far in unishing the boy as he did, but claimthat he did not know what to do ith him. The court viewed the boy n the light of an incorrigible, and he severely eprimanded for the triuble he has caused his parents.

The charge against the father was ithdrawn when the court was satisled that the boy was really uncon-rollable, and unless the youngster shows an improvement at once he was given to understand that he will be sent to the Industrial School at Police court matters took up a great deal of Magistrate Paterson's time yeserday. A charge of assault against Viiliam Jordan, who admitted hav-William Jordan, who ing struck a son of Neil Barker, of ing struck a son of Neil Barker, of Beachville, was dismissed, after Mr. Jordan offered his explanation. He explained that he had three small children, the eldest only four, and that the Barker boy, who is ten, frequently bothered them. He had spoken to Mr. Barker about the conduct of his boy, but he did not desist. On Sunday he saw the boy striking his girl, who was down on her knees, and on who was down on her knees, and on the impulse of the moment he hit the Mothers should always keep Zam-The magistrate reprimanded the and in dismissing the case asbey, and in dismissing the case assessed Mr. Barker with the costs.

Madame Tissot sprang to her feet, and hastily intercepted her. "Waft a moment. my dear," she exclaimed. "I cannot hope to put the matter before you as eloquently as the young man himself." She and to the door and opened it. "Stay here, please, and I will send him to you."

The girl paused, uncecided. She had no desire for an interview with young D'Este, and yet she could not help remembering that Richard Duvall had instructed her to hear all that these people might have to say. Her first inclination was to leave the house at once. She approached the door in some doubt as to whether or not she should go. As she reached it, it was suddenly pushed open from within and young D'Este came quickly into the room. She exclaimed coldly, then waited for him to speak.

He closed the door carefully, looking at her in momentary doubt. "Madame Tis."
