

charming speaker. I do not know whether Dr. Walter, the Chairman of the German Department would go; he is a witty speaker. There is also Professor Graff in that Department. I do not know how he speaks, but I understand he has recently written a most interesting book "Languages and Language", on philology. Sir Andrew Macphail might go, if you would like to have him. I should prefer to hear from you again before I approach anyone. Then there is Dr. Day, an expert on central banks and the gold standard, who has been doing a great deal of public speaking lately. Of course, in October, at the beginning of term, it is difficult to persuade anyone to go away, as they are all usually very busy with their University work, but I shall do the best I can.

Ever yours faithfully,

Principal
