

the preference. With a view merely to introduce the subject before the public, and to invite their attention to it, an example is given, in the Appendix, under the head, FREDONIA, to shew the convenience and utility of such a general name. The Author has not the temerity or the vanity to think of giving a name to his country. He would not be considered as the strenuous advocate of any one of those above suggested. He only wishes that the government, whose right it is, would fix upon and establish a specific name, which shall honourably distinguish our country and its inhabitants, from the rest of the world.

CHARLESTOWN, (Mass.) MARCH 1st, 1804.

GAZETTEER