Dear Sir:—Just a line to express my appreciation for the very kind and prompt attention shown me while visiting your department last Thursday.

I have never visited a firm where so much personal interest is displayed to its customers' needs. Nothing seems too much trouble, and every one seems to perform their duties in a most cheerful and admirable manner.

Nothing in my estimation can be said too much in favor of the department which you control. I have had considerable experience in a former position with the above company in dealing with different manufacturers' concerns, and must say that I have yet to find one that manufactures so conscientiously, and must say that I have yet to find one that manufactures so conscientiously, and must say that I have yet to find one that manufactures so conscientiously.

I am convinced that the "Indian" is the foremost, and it is easily explicable, as I could not restrain myself from writing you these few words of appreciation.
