

dance with the agreement, six brothers, accompanied by the founder, arrived in Louisville in the fall of the same year. Bishop Spalding procured for the Brothers a spacious and commodious dwelling in the centre of the city. In the same building they now conduct St. Xavier's Institute, one of the most prosperous academies in the State, of Kentucky.

After Bishop Spalding was appointed to the Archbishopric of Baltimore, he asked and obtained from the Superior-General (Bro. Vincent, successor to the Founder who still occupies the office,) some Brothers to take charge of St. Mary's Industrial School, which grand charity he had at that time in view. The brothers took charge, of it, and now after a period of nearly fifteen years the Institution with its 400 inmates stands as a shining monument to the large hearted and charitable prelate, who was its founder—Archbishop Martin John Spalding. After being in Baltimore a few years the Brothers accepted the invitation of the zealous pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Rev. J. T. Gaitley, to take charge of his school.

On November 26, 1871 the saintly founder died, deeply regretted by the Congregation. After twenty-seven years of unceasing labor for the establishment of his Congregation, he, at a ripe old age, went to his God to receive the reward he so justly merited.
