

Mr. McNeill upon his leadership. Mr. O'Brien, said Sir Charles Tupper had... What good had the Government accomplished by its course? He would reply it had done this: That on a matter which appeared more immediately to the members of the House than any other question, namely, the privilege of enjoying the visit to their homes on Saturday and Sunday...

Mr. O'Brien—Was that all? Sir Charles Tupper—Will not two to one satisfy the hon. gentleman? If not, we shall get a larger majority. The hon. gentleman who has borne the brunt of the Government's policy to forego their personal pleasure to help pass the bill. The Government could no longer be said to have a bare majority on their effort to put this law into the statute book, and he thought Mr. O'Brien's party had a right to assurance before the House after such a lesson.

Mr. McNeill out of the Party? Sir Charles proposed to deal with the member for North Bruce. Mr. McNeill had a letter to party management, saying that he could not read the bill out of the country with him, Sir Charles said he entirely agreed that could only be done by an hon. gentleman who would prove to the House at once that Mr. McNeill had read himself out of the party. He would put it to the hon. gentleman his name, and if the House if it were not so, Mr. McNeill had said that (he Sir Charles) did not represent the country with the measure unpassed, and that was Mr. McNeill's ground for taking the position of the country in the House. Well, the Government could at least go to the country without the measure, and knowing they at least did all they could to put it on the statute book...

Continuing, he remarked that in endeavoring to secure the Government and break down the party, Mr. McNeill was not likely acting under the influence devoted to the public good, but for the sake of the party, and that he was willing to fight a no-money battle with an open foe, but I fear for Mr. McNeill.

Mr. McNeill's speech was read out. He had spoken at the reply, denied that he had read himself out of the party, and that he had a letter to party management, adding that neither would he allow anyone else to do it. As for Sir Charles Tupper, his course since he had to break it up. In treating the conscientious scruples of his friends with contempt, Sir Charles showed the true character of the gifts of statesmanship, or successful leadership, which he had shown to the Senate. Sir Mackenzie's story, however, led to the House last session, disposed of the matter. People knew him better than the Ministerial benches.

Mr. McNeill declined to accept that explanation and went on to attack the leader of the House. He said he was not here and Sir Charles would not principles, but succeed in the House by bullying and browbeating the members who differed from him. He was endeavoring to force a measure on the House which he knew was not constitutional. Mr. Speaker, reminding him that it was not open to an honorable member to accuse the leader of the House of forcing on the House a measure he "knew" to be unconstitutional.

Mr. McNeill followed in a solemn denunciation of the Secretary of State. Mr. Macdowell replied by pointing to the obstruction tactics of the member for Winnipeg the other night, and Mr. Fraser spoke in a strain to address the great enjoyment of his Liberal friends of the growing fashion of reading members out of the party since Sir Charles Tupper came its leader in the House.

urday. He mentioned the fact that the proposed increase of salary to Mr. Kilgour, the Speaker, was a number of other measures. He was frequently called to order by the Speaker for entering into details on these measures.

Sir Charles Tupper said that the House was within two hours of Friday morning, and he would, therefore, ask if Mr. Wallace wished to prevent any business being done, and he would ask a question as to whether the Government had any business to do on Friday. Considering that the Government had in deference to the feelings of members, agreed to adjourn over Friday, it was most unreasonable for Mr. Wallace to be wandering to Belgium, and all over the world, pretending to support a motion that was his hope to defeat.

Mr. Landerkin—Read him out. (Loud laughter.) Mr. Wallace—The leader of the House is unkind. I don't see what he has to read him for these remarks.

Mr. Wallace—Be careful. (Renewed laughter.) Mr. Wallace, continuing, expressed some time, and at one point Sir Charles was heard to say in undertone, "Oh, dear, let us have a vote."

Mr. Wallace, continuing, expressed his regret that Sir Charles had not been able to do so. He had done so about Mr. McNeill.

The discussion was continued by Messrs. Temple and McMillan. Mr. McCarthy is bitter. Mr. McCarthy said that those whom the gods wished to destroy they first make mad. He had a right to say that Sir Charles Tupper, day after day, read men, as good Conservatives as himself, as mad. He had a right to say that Sir Charles Tupper did it, it was for his own personal advancement. He had insisted that Sir Charles Tupper should be Premier to further his own ends. Personally, he (Mr. McCarthy) would feel he was falling low as a gentleman if he who had for years gone up and down the country doing his best to break down the Conservative Government, were thereby pretty well read himself out of the party.

Mr. Haggart then took the floor. He repudiated emphatically Mr. McCarthy's charge that Sir Charles Tupper had intruded against the present Premier. There was not a member of the Government but would confirm that statement. He would confirm that statement. He would confirm that statement. He would confirm that statement.

HAPPENINGS OF A DAY. Items of Passing Interest Gathered in and Around this Busy City.

The school teachers of the city received their salaries yesterday, about $30,000. The "L. S." brand hams, bacon and lard is only handled by the leading grocers. "Try them."

The directors of the National Club are considering plans for remodeling and enlarging the club building. Teresa McLean, charged with wounding Annie Maloney, was remanded till Wednesday.

The long-standing case against Doctor Polombo of cutting Raphael Simion's hair, was decided yesterday. Polombo being sent down for four months.

The eight-year-old burglar charge against John Horvath was dismissed because a revival of the case would hurt men who were concerned and weary of the prosecution. Horvath appears to bear a good character of late.

The funeral of John R. Hill, who died suddenly on Wednesday, will take place at 2 o'clock this afternoon at his residence, 275 Lansdowne-avenue, and will be attended by the members of the Order of the Holy Blossom Society and a large number of friends.

HE WORKED FOR LIBERALS. R. J. CARTER RELATES HIS STORY OF PERSONATION.

They Did Not See Him Through—A Plot to Get Tompkins and Horn, Charged With Highway Robbery, Out of Jail—How It Was Frustrated—A Hamilton Crank's Suit.

Hamilton, April 2.—(Special.)—R. J. Carter, who has been in jail on a charge of personation for some time, was liberated this morning and cannot be re-arrested. When Carter got out he told his friends a few circumstances in connection with the case, as a result of his ill-treatment. He said he had been brought here at the mayoralty election in 1894, from Toronto, by two men who he believed to be the Young Men's Liberal party for the purpose of personating voters. The names of the Liberals he gave are at present held in the positions under the Mowat Government. He said there was an understanding that all his expenses would be paid and that he would be protected from prosecution if caught.

ON STAGE AND PLATFORM. Current and Coming Attractions at the Local Play Houses and Concert Halls.

"An Artist's Model" is without doubt one of the most amusing productions ever given in Toronto, and the large audience that has gathered for the past night laughed incessantly for three hours. Owen Hall's clever production was splendidly put on by George Edwards' English burlesquers, whose fame had preceded them from the frequently caused roars of laughter.

The Local Legislature got through all its work yesterday, and on Tuesday at 3 o'clock a corporal's guard of members will assemble to participate in the ceremonies of prorogation.

Mr. Howland objected to Mr. Conroy's bill respecting the Port Arthur Water, Light and Power Co., and that time it was decided to be read a third time. The bill will be given a third reading on Tuesday.

A novelty for playgoers will be given next week at the Toronto Opera House in the form of an interesting reflex of the reconstruction period.

The "Princess To-Day." There are two performances of "The Princess To-Day" at the Grand Opera House, and the pantomime is exceptionally good, in fact the best the house has ever presented.
